Social Stunts

ONE GRAND AND GLORIOUS EVENING

Hilltop's Athletic Club's Annual Hallowe'en Social

Last Friday night, the hall was decorated with all sorts of weird things, black cats, which are bad enough, then owls, the kind that keep you awake at night, and then those infernal bats flying around through the hall, and other decorations to correspond with the event. Some eighty were present. They played those children's games, such as pinning the tail on a donkey, getting apples out of water with your mouth without drowning, and others. You would have thought that Harry Butler was taking a bath instead of getting apples. Refreshments were served, consisting of cider, gingerbread and pumpkin pie. The main event of the evening was the pie-eating contest. Jean Worrel, our youthful banker, won only by the fact that his capacity was greater than that of Dr. Slater, H. G. Butler, Dr. Murray, W. K. Merriman, W. L. Milliken and Bert Elliott. At the time of this writing no report has come from Worrel's home, as to whether he is able to be up and around. He admits he has had enough pumpkin pie for once. Probably the reason he ate so much—it was free. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Ater, Dr. and Mrs. E. J. Schaffer, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Drye, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Millikin, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Milliken, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Fairchilds, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Helmbrecht, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Spring, Mr. and Mrs. William Clover, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Slater, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Elliot, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Butler, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Baber, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Schultz, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rather, Mr and Mrs. W. K. Merriman, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Postle, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Holder, Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Carmichael, Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Fairchilds, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Rinehart, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Worrel, Mr. and Mrs. David Krause, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Lucas, Mrs. M. S. Raney, Mrs. Jennie Smith, Miss Edna Jackson, Mrs. Clara W. Sallee, Mrs. Alice V. Lutes, Mrs. G. K. Sculler, and Mr. F. R. Smith.

W. H. Orebaugh was out of town, but says he thought of us all evening, but assured the Club he would be present at the next social event, on Friday evening, November 4. So all you members that want a good time, be out that night.

Mr. and Mrs. Culp of 175 South Harris avenue, entertained the Night Hawk Club last Monday evening. The house was prettily decorated. The evening was spent in playing games and several pretty prizes were won. Dainty refreshments were served. The party broke up at a late hour, all having had a fine time. All members were present except Mr. and Mrs. Findeis, who sent their regrets, on account of the illness of their little daughter.

With Miss May Haas and Mrs. W. H. Kennedy in charge, the Queen Esther Circle of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Glenwood M. E. Church, has begun the year's work very satisfactorily. On Monday evening in the basement of the church, a very profitable and enjoyable meeting was held with Miss Esther Noe presiding, and Miss Corrinne Gilliland, Secretary. The Bible lesson was conducted by Lucile Glick, the uplifting songs by Ruth Holder presiding at the piano. Pauline Hanawalt, in appropriate costume, conducted an overland journey to the Indian reservations and schools, which was entered into with intense interest, as it followed an excellent recital of a true Indian incident by Frances Fairchild. Rev. Stimmel, by request, told so interestingly of his daughter's work at the Mitchell Home in North Carolina, and Mrs. Stimmel offered delightful words of profit and encouragement.

To the surprise of all, Misses Ducilla O'Hara, Irene and Florence Snider, Frances Fairchild, Delsie Fisher and Vella Peters directed the twenty-eight present to a Hallowe'en table spread with the appropriate decorations and best of all, home made pumpkin pies, doughnuts and cocoa. It was a good time in every sense of the word.

On Friday, October 21st, Mrs. C. W. Daugherty, 231 Whitethorne avenue, entertained with a luncheon, the following guests: Mrs. W. H. Knox, Mrs. H. O. Congdon, Mrs. C. W. Rodgers, Mrs. R. K. McIntire, Mrs. Howard Doss, Mrs. R. O. Keller, Mrs. H. C. Wilkins and Mrs. Carl Beck.

---

The Royal Neighbors of Glenwood Camp No. 7683 have an open meeting at the hall on Friday evening, October 28. A Hallowe'en feature will be the program.

---

A pleasant surprise party was held Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Geyer, it being Mr. Geyer's 52nd birthday anniversary. The weather being so fine, two large tables were set in the yard with plenty of chicken and good things to eat. Among those present were Mr. Geyer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Geyer, of Wheatland avenue, and his brothers, sisters and their families, and Mrs. Geyer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Corbin, and her brothers and sisters, numbering 55 in all. After having a fine time, they left, wishing Mr. Geyer many more happy birthdays.

It is desired that all Hilltop stores close at noon on Monday, on account of celebration of the opening of Broad Street Bridge

The program for the West Broad street bridge opening celebration next Monday, as outlined Tuesday by the Celebration Committee, provides for a continual round of "doings" starting at 2:30 p. m. and continuing well into the night.

Motorized unit of the afternoon parade will form at 1:30 at Hague avenue and West Broad street, and will move at 2:30. Pedestrians will fall in at head of the parade at Sandusky street on Broad street. They are to form in line at 2 p. m.

Ceremonies, with speaking and music by two 100-piece bands, will start at the Broad street bridge at 4 p. m.

United Spanish War Veterans will dedicate bridge to the memory of World War heroes, erecting an appropriate bronze tablet on a pillar of the bridge.

At 7 p. m. whistles an West Side factories will be blown, and band concerts will be started at Broad and High streets. Aerial bombs will then be sent up from the west bank of the river. Masked parade will follow band from Broad and High to the bridge, passing the judges' stand for choosing of prize-winning masqueraders.

Fireworks display on the river bank will start at 9 p. m.

At the Carlile & Kerr store six phonographs will be attached to one magnavox and the combined music from all six machines will be magnified at the same time through the one instrument, for street dancing.

A float representing an old-time "prairie schooner" being prepared by the Slater Candy Co., which plans to distribute a ton of candy kisses as the "schooner" moves along the parade route.

City Council Monday night granted request of Councilmen Westlake and Milliken, which give city employes a half holiday next Monday afternoon during the celebration, give permission to the Celebration Committee to set off fireworks Monday night and postpone Council's next meeting to Tuesday night so that the aldermen may participate in the Monday night celebration.

More than 100 residents of the West Side who are 60 years old or older, and who went through the 1913 flood, have accepted the Celebration Committee's invitation to be guests of honor during the afternoon. Autos to be furnished for carrying the aged flood survivors in the parade will assemble at Sandusky and Broad streets

The Celebration Committee is now seeking names of children born on the West Side during the 1913 flood. They are to me accorded a place of honor in the parade.

Gleanings from the W. C. T. U. State Convention held at Toledo, O., October 11th to 14th. Mrs. Welch, President of Hilltop Union, Mrs. Hearing, President of Sullivant avenue Union, and M. M. Marshall, a mere member in the rear ranks, were in attendance. I returned full of enthusiasm, especially for law enforcement. Franklin county sent her full share of the 549 voting delegates, who re-elected the same general officers.

The little we saw and heard of Toledo, made us wonder why boastful Columbus should dub her "frog pond," "back number," etc. Indeed in some worth while things she is far ahead of Columbus.

She has many lovely parks and a beautiful boulevard which was built when Sam Jones, the evangelist, was mayor, to give work to men out of employment. Just now Columbus might do well to follow her example. The local unions demonstrated a new phase of welfare work called "A Sister to the Expectant Mother," which touched every heart. Law enforcement was the keynote from start to finish.

George Greenhalgh, public safety director of Toledo, made a stirring plea for the help of all good citizens, men and women. He said: "In my year of office but one man has asked my assistance in enforcing law, while scores of gamblers, bootleggers, dive keepers, etc., have come seeking toleration. Said the pressure is toward laxity.

Charles McCain was introduced as the first man upon whom Francis Willard pinned the "little white ribbon bow." He was the oldest soldier that served across the sea.

Mrs. Richards, our State President, gave helpful, also spicy, tid-bits of her attendance at the National, recently held in Cal. There was only six Ohio delegates in convention, but she said the "Ohio Yell" sounded like 600 voices. A newspaper representative inquired of Mrs. Richards how the W. C. T. U. stood on cosmetics and covered ears. She answered "we stand on cosmetics, not for them, and we have other use for our ears than making door knobs of them. Taken all in all it was a very interesting and helpful convention.

M. M. MARSHALL.

CLEANLINESS IN OLD RUSSIA

Passage in Novel Would Lead One to Infer It Was Not Considered Important.

The quotation in the Companion from a publication of 1640 urging that "every day one should take pains to wash one's hands, and one should also wash one's face almost as often," reminds a contributor of a passage in Tolstoy's "War and Peace." The story, which follows the fortunes of Count Rostov, pictures the way in which the ladies of his family prepared in 1809 for a ball given "by a grandee of Catherine's time."

"It was," writes Tolstoy, "the first great ball that Natasha had ever attended. She had got up at eight o'clock that morning and had been all day long in a state of the wildest excitement and bustle. All her energies from earliest morning had been expended in the effort to have herself Sonya and her mamma dressed to perfection. Sonya and the countess trusted themselves entirely to her hands. The countess was to wear a dark red velvet gown; the two girls white crepe gowns with pink silk overskirts and roses in their corsages; their hair was to be arranged a la grecque.

"The most important part had already been done; their feet, their hands, their arms, their necks and their ears had been washed, perfumed and powdered with extraordinary care. On their feet they wore openwork silk stockings and white slippers with bows. Their toilets were almost finished. Sonya was already dressed and so was the countess."

The reader infers that their feet were included in the comprehensive washing only on account of the openwork stockings. And he is inclined to ask, if the tremendous preparation for such a ball caused only that much washing, how much did they wash day by day?—Youth's Companion.

"FREAK" EDITIONS OF BIBLE

On Account of Their Peculiar Errors Some of Them Are Worth Considerable Money.

Several examples of "freak" editions of the Bible recently came under the auctioneer's hammer in London.

One of the most remarkable is known as the "Big Bible." In this, the context of the Ninety-first Psalm runs: "Thou shalt not be afrayed for eny bugges by night"—"bugges," in mediæval times, meaning nightmares and other terrors.

Another curious example in the collection is the "Treacle Bible," in which the passage, Jeremiah 8:22, reads: "There is no more triacle at Gylead." The "Murderers' Bible" takes its title from an error in the translation of Jude, verse 8, which in the Authorized Version runs: "These are murmurers, complainers;" while a curious misprint in the Beatitudes: "Blessed are the place-makers," gave rise to one set of Bibles being known as the "Place-makers" edition.

Altogether there are no fewer than ten "freak" editions of the great book, some of them are of considerable value.

The vast black mass, 50,000,000 times larger than the sun, demonstrated to exist in the heavens by the Dutch scientist, Dr. Pannekoek, seems to upset all earlier astronomical calculations. It is, comparatively speaking, so near us that Dr. Pannekoek suggests that the sun itself must move around it once in 2,000,000 years—drawing the earth with it. "We believe that the black body must consist of dust, and that this is the first stage in the birth of a star," said an expert. "As it condenses it gets hotter until it becomes luminous and visible. Sudden 'flares' or 'new stars' have been seen in our lifetime, but the black cloud of dust appears to be the real beginning. The amazing feature is the nearness of the body. It is relatively as close to the earth as a foot rule would appear to be if only two feet away from your eyes. It is quite possible that even vaster bodies of this kind exist." The nearness is relative. The body is 280,000,000,000,000 miles away.

The Law and the King.

We remember that, even in the days of almost universal assent to the divine authority of kings, Justice Coke could boldly challenge and check the autocratic Charles with the judgment that the law was superior to the will of the sovereign. Christian teachings and evolution of two thousand years, and the slow and laborious development of the principles of justice and judgment by proof, demand this crowning triumph of ages of sacrifice and struggle. The closing of the nineteenth, the most beneficent and progressive of centuries, would be made glorious by giving to the twentieth this rich lesson and guide for the growth of its humanities and the preservation and perpetuity of civilization and liberty.—Chauncey Depew.

Value Increased.

She (pouting)—You don't value my kisses as you used to.

He—Value them? Why, before we were married I used to expect a dozen in payment for a box of candy, and now I consider only one of them sufficient payment for a new dress.

No "If" About Dying;

A wealthy man, in getting his "house in order," was heard to remark: "Now, I've arranged all my papers for my family, so that if I die—"

"If you die," interrupted his lawyer; "say when you die; there is no 'if' about dying."

There is food for thought in this incident. We are all prone to look at the matter as did this wealthy man. We think of the future with the conditional stipulation—"if I die," and frame everything around that "if." As a matter of fact, there is nothing more certain than death. It is when and not if.

PROTECTED BY WHITE BONE

How People of Eastern Algeria Guard Themselves Against the Glance of the Evil Eye.

People who live in eastern Algeria always have a few beehives near their homes. Sometimes the Berber will place the beehives on the roof of his house.

The Berbers know bees so well and like honey so much that from earliest infancy they look upon the bee as a friend who must be guarded and need not be feared. The Berber housewife takes great care of her bees. She makes sure that a sand storm suddenly sweeping across the great desert will not utterly ruin the beehive. She protects the hives, their store of honey and the workers who make the honey by covering the hives with mats.

Underneath the beehives, in plain sight of every one who passes, a white bone swings in the breeze. The Berber is superstitious, and his chief fear is danger from the evil eye.

Fear of the evil eye has come down through the ages. It is common in many other countries, particularly the south of Europe. In all these lands, various talismans are supposed to ward off the dangers of the evil eye. The chief reliance of the Berbers is placed in a white bone. Any bone will serve so long as it is white, and so placed that it catches the eye of the passer-by.

The bone is believed to catch the glance of the person who may have an evil eye. Being attracted by the gleaming white bone, the glance of the evil eye is believed to be held by it and kept from banefully falling upon the object it is placed to protect.

SEEM TO ENJOY WORRYING

Persons Possessed of That Tragic Temperament Can Only Be Regarded as Afflictions.

Even if the "manufacturers of worry" only suffered themselves, it would not be so bad; unfortunately, however, they have a knack of transferring their tragic feelings to others. A whole houseful of people can be made miserable by one person with a tragic temperament.

The question arises: What is the best way to deal with them? Experience tells me that we should never show sympathy. At the same time, nothing is gained by making little of a trouble which they regard as gigantic. That has an irritating effect!

The best cure is to ignore their "tragic tales" as much as possible. Just express a passing regret that "the grocer has failed to send," or that "a husband started on his journey without his tooth brush" (as if he couldn't buy one in the place for which he was bound, or clean his teeth for once with a handkerchief) and nothing more!

When one has been polite, then pass on to talk of something else. Of course, one could quote:

"A trouble's a pound or a trouble's an ounce,
A trouble is what you make it.
It isn't the size of the trouble that counts,
It's just this—how do you take it?"

But the verse is an old one, and I doubt if it has had the effect of decreasing the apparent size of any trouble which came the way of those with "tragic temperaments."—London Answers.

Causes of Winds.

Winds are produced by a disturbance of the equilibrium in some part of the atmosphere; a disturbance always resulting from a difference in temperature between adjacent sections. Thus, if the temperature of a certain extent of ground becomes higher, the air in contact with it becomes heated, the air expands and goes toward the colder or higher regions of the atmosphere; whence it flows, producing winds which blow from hot to cold countries. But at the same time the equilibrium is destroyed at the surface of the earth, for the pressure on the colder adjacent parts is greater than on that which has been heated, and hence a current will be produced with a velocity dependent on the difference between these pressures; thus two distinct winds will be produced—an upper one setting outward from the heated region, and a lower one setting inward toward it.

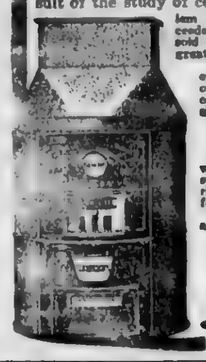
Heat ALL Your House

THROUGH ONE REGISTER

Yes, it's just as possible in your home as it has been in fifty thousand others. You, too, may have every room comfortable with balmy healthful heat, reaching every corner by Nature's method of circulation—and all through only one register! It isn't necessary to clutter up your house with pipes, overheat your cellar and incur big bills—not when you can get the

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE



The Original Patented Pipeless Furnace

It can be set up in a day, without inconvenience to you, and will make your home so comfortable in the severest winter weather you will be well repaid.

Your house will be uniformly warm; your cellar will be just right for the storage of fruits and vegetables. Your fuel bill will be less than with stoves that heat only a part of your house.

HERE ARE THE REASONS

The Caloric is the Original Patented Pipeless Furnace—the result of the study of competent engineers to solve the heating problem in the most satisfactory way. That they have succeeded is proved by the fact that the number of Calorics sold on an absolute guarantee of satisfaction is three times greater than any other pipeless furnace.

The cause of this satisfaction lies in the patented and exclusive principles that distinguish the Caloric from all others. It is not a pipe furnace provided with an extra casing, but a complete revolution in furnace building designed exclusively for pipeless heating.

Come In And See Us

We will show you what these principles are, and you will then see what Caloric quality means, why it always succeeds and why imitations cannot accomplish the same results. Then you will be in no danger of buying an inferior article, with all its disappointment in later months.

Get a copy of the book "Progress," which tells the fact about pipeless heating. If you can't come in, write for it.

The Girl From Goshen

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Peter Bancroft surveyed the little party with critical blue eyes, and at last his good-humored face crinkled into a wide smile.

"Some bunch—didn't any of them know this was a picnic—a boating party that might turn into a water fete at any moment if any one should rock the boat. Why, those girls are dolled up for a shindy!" No one listened to Peter's mutterings and he grumbled still more as one girl used a lipstick and another dredged her pretty nose with powder. "Good-night!" sighed the practical young man. "Don't they want the sunshine and fresh air to get at their skins? There's one, however—the little girl from Goshen—she's got sense!"

The pretty girls and the stalwart young men gathered on the pier waiting for Ben Hampton and his motorboat had not paid much attention to the girl from Goshen, who was the country cousin of Adele Parks, the lipstick girl. Adele was rather ashamed of Mildred Moore, who wore a wool skirt and a white middy blouse and rubber-soled canvas shoes.

"She looks a fright," thought Adele as she teetered about on her French-heeled pumps—"those lisle-thread stockings are cheap looking and there isn't a speck of powder on her face—freckles on her nose—mercy, what will the girls think of her?" The girls probably thought as did pretty Adele—that the demure girl with the rosy complexion and the powdering of golden freckles across her charming nose and the vivid red lips of perfect health was a fright, while they, attired in expensive silk sport clothes, spent stray moments in renewing their hidden complexions.

"Everybody ready?" sang out Ben Hampton as his boat shot up to the pier; "got all the lunch baskets, sweaters, cameras, etcetera, and so forth? Pile in—trim ship there—you can't all sit on one side, even if 'tis more sociable! No room for lunch baskets, eh? Put 'em in the skiff astern and I'll trail it; you, young feller, meaning Mr. Bancroft, jest sit there and keep your eye on the skiff—

Mildred Investigated the Pantry.

I know that's tough luck when there's so many pretty girls about—all a-b-o-a-r-d!"

The good launch Fairy Queen puffed her way out of the harbor and off toward the long beach in the outer bay. Beyond Long Beach was their goal for the day's outing. Little Gulf island—young Mrs. Fay was chaperoning them, and the picnic baskets would furnish refreshment after the bathing.

Mildred Fane, the girl from Goshen, sat beside Peter Bancroft, and because Peter was so busy watching the skiff full of baskets that he could not talk to her she had rather a dull time; the other young people all knew each other so well and were so merry over their own interesting affairs that Mildred wondered if she had not made a mistake in coming. But Adele had insisted, and Mildred had so longed for the day's fun.

After Ben Hampton had landed them at the island and his boat had chugged away, not to return until sundown, the picnickers scattered along the beach. They did not have to gather driftwood for a fire, for they had brought thermos bottles and cooked foods in abundance? So they missed half the fun of a beach picnic.

It was Mildred Fane's eyes that discovered the loss of the lunch baskets.

"Where are the baskets?" she asked the other ten as they tripped down the beach toward the water, clad in bathing garments doused to the shelter of some weather-beaten bath houses. "Where have they gone, Mr. Bancroft?"

"Why—I put them right there," confessed Peter, guiltily, pointing to a spot entirely covered by the rising tide.

"Look!" cried Mrs. Fay, with a tragic gesture.

They looked—and saw the six baskets bobbing away rapidly; once they thought the tide would return them on the crest of a wave, but, alas, the baskets were lost in a smother of foam and went manfully to the bottom to astonish the fishes.

"Every—last—one—gone," said Peter in a hollow tone.

"Peter Bancroft, I hope you'll starve to death!" she sputtered.

They all laughed then and Peter apologized, but apologies wouldn't feed eleven hungry people for "kind words butter no parsnips," as the old saying goes.

"We might forget it all, until Ben comes for us and then we will all dine—heartily, of course—at the hotel," remarked Lorimer, who was longing for a swim. "It isn't much of a hardship to skip a meal now and then."

"Who ever heard of a picnic without food?" asked one of the girls mournfully.

"Let us make this the first one," he was adding, when Mildred stepped forward, blushing warmly under the fire of ten pairs of eyes.

"Wait a moment, please; my cousin, Gregory Brown, has a cabin in the pines back here, he and his friends come and camp for days at a time, and there is usually a good supply of food—some canned things—and I believe he would not care if we entered and helped ourselves."

"Fine!" they all agreed, and forgetting the swim they followed Mildred to the cabin in the pines. Peter forced a window and entered, opening a door for their entrance into a cosy interior. Mildred investigated the pantry.

"Plenty of salt codfish, potatoes, flour, lard, sugar, coffee, some butter—eggs, but doubtful! Tinned milk, and fruit and vegetables. Call for volunteers in the kitchen!" She surveyed the crestfallen face of the girls with merry eyes.

John Lorimer eagerly volunteered and Adele reluctantly followed his example. The others deserted shamelessly for the water. Adele watched her cousin so thoroughly at home in an atmosphere of domesticity. It was Adele who stood awkwardly by while Mildred managed the blue-flame oil stove with a practiced hand; she deftly tossed biscuits together and put them into the oven; it was the Girl from Goshen who made a pie from dried peaches with a lattice-work top crust, even baking a "pie-crust-patty" for John Lorimer. "My mother used to do it that way," he kept saying until envious Adele flung out of the house and forgot her troubles in the fresh salt bath.

Those hours of intimacy as they prepared the delicious meal of creamed codfish and potatoes, fluffy biscuit, pickles, pie and coffee, were worth days of casual social intercourse to Mildred and grave John Lorimer. He unbent from his dignity and pared potatoes and humbly waited upon her; then, when the meal was over he delivered the clearing up into the hands of the well-fed, happy picnickers, while he and Mildred walked to the point and took a well-earned rest on the cool sands.

"And that," said Adele tragically, as she dressed for Mildred's wedding, "is the way I lost John Lorimer!"

WORKS OF FAITH

When John Wesley was endeavoring to found an orphan school at Newcastle-upon-tyne, he had plans arranged and his workman engaged and was going to leave. They desired one hundred pounds for materials to commence the work, but Wesley had not the money. His plans were all laid and the time fixed for leaving, but where would the money come from? Just as he was about to leave, a Quaker called upon him, and said: "John, I had a strange dream about thee last night. I thought I saw thee with a parcel of little lambs in a storm and thee was trying to shelter them, and had no place. I woke up and thought of thy orphan-house, and here is my checks for one hundred pounds." This was just the sum that was wanted. God intended that the poor children should be taken care of, so he put into Wesley's mind the purpose to go forward, and placed in the old Quaker's pocket the money and the heart to give it.—Selected.

Characteristics of Genius.

Most people perhaps think of great literary or scientific men, or other men of genius, as retiring and inclined to live the life of a recluse. Some of them have been of that type, but not all, by any means. Browning didn't belong to those who disliked company and a good dinner; Dickens wasn't of that crowd; Thackeray did not belong; neither did Dick Steele, Samuel Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith, Joshua Reynolds, or other worthies of the Eighteenth century. Tennyson loved his quiet and Carlyle grumbled in his garret, both to their own discomfiture and with a loss to their readers. Among the New England notables of the middle of the last century, only Hawthorne was downright unsociable. —Kansas City Star.

To Preserve China.

Many a lover of fine china has been heartbroken to discover her choice dinner or tea set lined with hair-like cracks. Hot tea or chocolate poured into dainty cups cracks them instantly.

A Chinese merchant gave this bit of information when a rare tea set was purchased from him. "Before using delicate china place it in a pan of cold water. Let it come gradually to the boil and allow the china to remain in the water till cold." This tempers the china, and it is capable of withstanding the sudden expansion caused by the heat. There is no need of repeating the treatment for a long time."—Toronto Globe.

TALES OF ANCIENT VOYAGERS

Make as Pleasant Reading Today as They Did When They Were First Written.

Many of the tales of voyagers that were collected by Richard Hakluyt in the time of Shakespeare are fully as pleasant to read now as "Robinson Crusoe" or "Gulliver's Travels," and they have the advantage of being shorter. Take, for instance, "The First Voyage of Master John Davis, Undertaken in June, 1585, for the Discovery of the North-West Passage, written by John James Merchant, servant of the Worshipful Master William [illegible]." Here we read of the discovery of a land "the first sight whereof did show as if it had been in form of a sugar loaf standing to our sight above the clouds, for that it did show over the fog like a white lime in the sky."

Mooring the barque in good order, the captain and his company went on shore on a small island, where they found people who showed them a "thing made like a timbrel," which they "did beat upon with a stick, making a noise like a small drum." Then John James Marchant goes on to tell of the canoes which these people had, the rocks of the land "very fair, like marble, full of veins of divers colors," of their sleds, of their fire backed by stones laid like a wall, of their fruit like currants, and of the pools of snow-water beside cliffs "of such ore as Master Forbisher brought from Meta Incognita." A pleasant land it was to discover, and a pleasant land it is to discover today with the help of some parts of Hakluyt's tales.

IF THAT NAIL HAD BUT HELD!

Tradition has not designated the manner of hanging the horseshoe; it has no such influence in this respect as the crescent moon is supposed to have upon rainfall, by pouring out or retaining luck. The superstition is of the vintage of mortality plays in Merrie England, and is a part of the folklore of the farm in feudal times; the horseshoe frightens the devil away.

The story runs that the devil, driven out of the fertile country into the rocky hills by the good people, found one hoof worn to the quick by the sharp stones. Limping in pain to a village smithy, he terrorizes the smith at night into fitting him with an iron shoe. The canny smith in friendly chat finds his customer much the same as the general run of the peasantry. Emboldened by the roaring of his forge fire and the ring of his hammer on the anvil, he drives all the nails but one in the usual manner, clinching them in the hoof; then, asking his confiding client to put his hoof on the floor that he may judge the fit, with a mighty blow he drives the last nail right through the shoe deep into the oaken floor.

Leaving the raging devil a prisoner, he goes to summon the villagers to dispatch him. This strategy did not succeed, for the terror-stricken devil in his struggles wrenched off the shoe and with bleeding hoof in great pain escaped to continue his evil practices. But to this day whenever he sees a horseshoe hung up he flees the place in shame and fright.

INSECTS HAVE SIXTH SENSE

Ants Provided With "Feelers," Which Are to Them of the Highest Importance.

All insects and a certain number of other animals are provided with appendages which the ordinary man calls feelers.

These feelers provide their owner with a mysterious sixth sense which we ourselves lack—a sense which is certainly not sight, hearing, or smell though possibly it may be a very slight sense of touch.

It is by stroking with their feelers that ants discriminate between friend and foe. You may paint an ant blue or cover him with a strange smelling compound, but his fellows will never make a mistake.

The lobster, the prawn, and the shrimp use their feelers to guide them when they are swimming tail first; to speed. Bees and butterflies seem to use them for examining flowers before they begin to sip the honey.

The whiskers of the cat and the rat are stiff hairs to the roots of which are attached very sensitive nerves. It is supposed that they act as guides when their owner is moving in the dark. If they touch an obstacle, an instantaneous message to the brain enables the cat or rat to make a quick movement to one side or the other.

PLANTS' POWER OF MOTION

Enthusiasts Who Have Studied the Subject Say That Many Undoubtedly Possess It.

One of the chief popular distinctions between vegetable and animal life is that animals have power of choice and of voluntary motion, while vegetables and plants grow only mechanically. But the microscope seems to show that many vegetable forms can move as easily as can animals.

There is a plant called volvox globator, so minute that millions of it could be put in a drinking glass, which is seen to whirl like a top across the field of the microscope. Some plants found in ponds, which are still more minute, move habitually, as with an apparent purpose.

Naturalists who have given closer study than others to climbing plants state that these seem to exercise the liberty of choice. Their tendrils, in climbing over pieces of wood with holes, will try one hole after another until they find one that pleases them. One investigator saw a tendril withdraw itself after having pushed itself in a hole for 36 hours.

Bat's Wings Wonderful.

The bat, whose wings are a maze of nerves, which enable it to avoid objects in flight, is declared by scientists to be one of the most wonderful of all animals in its physical makeup. It is claimed for it that it has from one to three senses that no other animal has. So delicate are the nerves of its wings and so responsive to air vibrations that a bat can be blinded and turned loose in a room where several objects are hanging from the ceiling by cords, and it will fly around them without touching any object, the nerves catching the "feel" of the objects as the bat draws near them. Naturalists in experimenting with bats have whirled a cane over their heads so rapidly that the cane appeared to be a misty funnel. On their heads they wore caps of vivid colors that bats dislike, and would frequently fly at. The bats would rush at them until the whirling cane was reached, and then dart down, touch the cap and fly away, passing between the orbit of the cane without being touched, demonstrating a keenness of observation and delicacy of speed judgment unequaled by any other living animal.

PHRASE IN USE BY ROMANS

Writers of Ancient Empire First Referred to the Game of "Ducks and Drakes."

"Ducks and drakes," an expression used commonly in connection with a person who is heedless in money or business matters, has gained wide circulation since it was first used among the Romans.

Minucius Felix and other ancient writers allude to a game of scaling oyster shells or stones on the water. If the stone emerged one [illegible] was said to be a "duck."

England adopted the [illegible] and gave the phrase its present-day meaning. Just when it was first applied is not known. But it is well used in Henry Peacham's book, "The Worth of a Penny," published in London in 1647:

"I remember in Queen Elizabeth's time a wealthy citizen of London left his son a mighty estate in money, who, imagining he should never be able to spend it, would usually make ducks and drakes in the Thames river, with shilling pieces as boys are wont to do with tiles and oyster shells. And in the end he grew to such extreme want that he was fain to beg or borrow a sixpence, having many times no more shoes than feet and sometimes having more feet than shoes."

Chant of the Motor Boat.

My motor boat, 'tis of thee, short road to poverty—of thee I chant. I blew a pile of dough on you three years ago; now you refuse to go—or won't or can't. Through channel and by oceanside you were my joy and pride, a happy day. I loved the gaudy hue, the nice white paint anew; but you're down and out for true, in every way. To thee, old rattlebox, came many jumps and knocks; for thee I grieve. No shelter from a storm; frayed are thy seats and worn; the whooping cough affects the "chug" I do believe. The perfume swells the breeze, and only causes one to sneeze, as we pass by. I paid for thee a price, 'twould buy a mansion twice; now everybody's yelling "Ice"—I wonder why. The motor has the grip, the spark plug has the pip, and who is thine. I, too, have suffered chills, fatigue and kindred ills; endeavoring to pay my bills, since thou were mine. Gone is my bankroll now, no more 'twould choke a cow, as once before. Yet, if I had the mon', so help me, Jack—amen, I'd buy a boat again and speed some more.—Bayliss Y. C. Logbook.

Laws Against Profanity.

Did you know that according to the law of England swearing is an offense for which you may be convicted by a justice of the peace according to a scale of penalties? And the higher up you are in the social scale the higher the fine imposed. A day laborer, common soldier or seaman forfeits one shilling for every oath; every other person under the degree of gentleman two shillings and above the degree of gentleman five shillings. For a second offense it is double the sum, for a third, triple, etc. At any time a constable may arrest a profane swearer and take him before a justice. On one occasion a man lost his temper entirely and swore the same oath twenty times before a justice. The latter counted them and when the man had finally stopped, fined him two shillings for each repetition. There is a similar law in Scotland.

Social Stunts

The Needle Art Club was delightfully entertained at a Hallowe'en party given at the home of Mrs. Carroll's mother, Mrs. McIntosh, on South Whitethorne avenue. Everyone came masked and as they entered the "House of Spooks," were given a numbered slip of paper by little Edith Carroll. These later proved to be our partner numbers. The members tried to guess who each other might be. Mr. Rudolph and Mrs. McLaughlin carried off the prizes. After trying to get our sides and faces back to normalacy, they got all twisted up again at the wedding of Miss Samantha Smearcase and Mr. Sauer Kraut Cabbage. A sumptuous lunch of sandwiches, salad, pumpkin pie, coffee and apples was served. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Beecher Dildine, Mr. and Mrs. Arch Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mann, Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. J. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Young Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rudolph, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Colburn, Mr. and Mrs. Art Carroll, Miss Bennett, Mrs. Roskai, Mary Rudolph and John and Margaret Colburn and Genevieve Young.

Miss Marjorie Slater, 27 North Ogden avenue, entertained with a Hallowe'en party Saturday evening, October 29, from 7 to 11 o'clock. Those present were Curtis Wilcox, Norma Noice, Leonard Martin, Mabel Roberts, Walter Kidd, Clara Slyh, Herbert Schluep, Annabel Ohlen, Herbert Cramer, Dorothy Fuller, Harold Noice, Georgia Burke, James Miller, Ella Lamprecht, Sanford Kaufman, Marjorie Slater, Mrs. Bundy, Mrs. Noice, and Mr. and Mrs. Slater.

The intermediate Christian Endeavor Society of St. Paul's United Evangelical Church entertained with a masquerade Hallowe'en party on Tuesday evening in the Endeavor room. Generous decorations of corn fodder, numerous ghosts transformed the room into a mysterious rendevoux entrance to which was gained only after solemnly bowing and taking the pledge guarded by a ghostly skeleton at the door. This pledge bound each one not to shirk their share in all the evening program. Hallowe'en games and contests were enjoyed by all, as well as the delicious pumpkin pies and doughnuts prepared by our own Intermediate girls. Those present were: Helen and Alice Snyder, Juanita and Ruth Dixon, Julia and Freda Armstrong, Dorothy and Beatrice Postle, Evelyn Edwards, Margaret and Virginia Anderson, Betty Knapp, Miriam and Margaret Seesholtz, Selma Houdashelt, Mabel Steele, Marion and Raymond King, George Melvin, Raymond Hill, Ralph Dunn, Gerald Seesholtz, John Postle, Earl Edwards, Archie Knapp, Oscie Steele and Allen Knapp. Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Knapp most ably assisted the social committee and superintendent in preparing for the carrying out of the evening's program, as did Rev. and Mrs. Seesholtz, and we feel that the success of the evening was due in a large measure to their interest and co-operation.—Secretary.

On the evening of October 28, a Hallowe'en party was held at the home of Eleanor Anderson. The evening was spent in jolly games. Those present were: Betty Knapp, Vivian Seesholtz, Louise Thompson, Bertha Dunlapp, Martha Waymer, Mary Mider, Avriel Snyder, Lena Snyder, Frances Dixon, Betty Dixon, Ruth Leach, Mary Woulff, Edward Mider, Allan Knapp, Ben Woulff and the hostess, Eleanor Anderson.

THE LITTLE STORY THAT'S TRUE

"THE ENGINEER"

There he stood a little bent old man with his thin white hair blowing gently back from his wrinkled brow as he stood gazing, hat in hand, at a beautiful and majestic structure, a steel railway bridge spanning a mighty river. As he gazed he saw its towering height, its almost incredible span, its symmetry, its matchless strength and yet withal the delicacy and trimness of each of its members, each one unimportant as an individual but indispensable as a component part of the whole. He saw in this the wonder structure and as he meekly raised his eyes toward heaven, he gave thanks unto God for marvels wrought.

The bridge, the majestic structure that it was, was a source of wonder, but what shall we say of the little gray-haired man. A casual observer might have considered him an object of pity as he stood there in an almost abject posture, but O! how easily we may err in judging by outward appearances, for this little man was the designer and builder of that mighty bridge. And now as he gazed he builded again the bridge in his fancy. His soul was stirred with exultation as he dreamed again of its great benefits to mankind by shortening the lines of travel and communication. He saw again, in his mind's eye, the countless thousands of unconscious travelers who would pass safely over this mighty river on its trusty spans and his heart rejoiced that he had been able to serve his fellowmen. His mind then turned back to the days of fabricating the steel and the days of erection, with all of its rigors and hardships. He reviewed again the long list of hardy workmen who had toiled without ceasing, that this massive structure might become a reality. He saw in them also, as in the parts of the bridge, the necessary components to make up the whole of human society. He attributed to all a spirit of service and he recalled how three workmen had paid the supreme sacrifice that this service might be done. He was seized and thrilled by a spirit of exultation that he along with all God-fearing men, might become instrumental in serving mankind thru God's guidance and human co-operation. For had not the Master said that the greatest of all, shall be the servant of all?

As he turned away, his only regret was that he had not the opportunity to build a more beautiful and useful structure and he thought of Holmes' lines:

Build thee more stately mansions, O! my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from Heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell
By life's unresting sea!

But he had built better than he knew.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to the friends of our beloved wife and sister, Mrs. Sarah Sauttee, for their kindness and floral design offered during her recent sickness and death. Mr. George Sauttee, husband, Mrs. Boam, and Mrs. Foerster, sisters.

Mrs. Lydia A. Gill, 72 years of age, widow of Mr. John W. Gill, died of paralysis last Sunday night, at the home of her son, Arthur N. Gill, 32 North Ogden avenue. She leaves another son, C. W. Gill. The funeral took place Tuesday, with burial at Caldwell, Ohio, by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Robert Morris Chapter No. 372, Order of Eastern Star, held their annual election of officers November 1, with a large attendance, in spite of bad weather.

Worthy Matron, Mrs. Lillian Hughes; Worthy Patron—John T. Evans; Secretary, Mrs. Olive Williams; Treasurer, Mrs. Jennie Budd; Associate Matron, Mrs. G. T. Ely; Condustress, Mrs. Lulu Constans; Associate Conductress, Mrs. E. J. Dry; Trustees, Mrs. W. E. Ranney and W. D. Hughes.

The Chapter, under the efficient and faithful leadership of Katherine Evans, assisted by her corps of well-trained officers, has just passed through the most successful year of its history. But we predict another record making year, under the leadership of Lillie Hughes, who has served the Chapter faithfully and well during the past five years. We know that one who has been so faithful and efficient in the past will make an enviable record. Success to you, Lillie, we are all with you.

The Chapter felt especially honored by a visit of the newly elected Worthy Grand Patron of the State of Ohio, Brother W. S. Andres, for which we know he is so well fitted, and we hope that he will find many opportunities to visit us during the busy year which we know is before him.

The beautiful church edifice being erected by St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church is rapidly approaching completion. On Sunday next, the congregation will begin holding Sunday School and church services in the basement of the new structure, and cordially invites the public to all of its services.

St. Paul's United Evangelical Sunday School conducted their annual election of officers, as follows: President, Juanita Dixon; Secretary, Ruth Dixon; Treasurer and Chairman, Finance Committee, Marabelle Redding; Chairman Social Committee, Helen Oliver; Chairman Lookout and Membership, Margaret Anderson. The regular business and social meeting will be held on the third Friday evening each month. However, owing to the proposed evangelistic meetings at St. Paul's, the November meeting will be held on the eleventh, at the home of Helen Oliver. At this time plans will be devised for funds to provide class pins, these to be presented at Christmas to each girl who has been faithful in attendance during November and December. Every teen-age girl on the Hilltop—from 13 to 18 years of age—not now a member of some Sunday School, is urged to join with us for service and for fun.

Miss Helen Marie Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Smith, 209 Whitethorne avenue, and Mr. Ralph V. Henery, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Henery, 276 South Hague avenue, were married Wednesday, October 26th, at six o'clock at the bride's home by Rev. C. E. Turley. Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Givens, grandparents of the bride, and Mrs. Frank Henery, mother of the bridegroom, witnessed the ceremony. The bride and bridegroom will be at home at 209 Whitethorne avenue.

Viola Bryan has installed a Larkin Pantry and will sell Larkin's Products from her home, 20 Highland avenue. She invites you to call and see her display of products.

While returning to his home near Circleville, Ohio, after a visit with his mother, Mrs. Lou Brown, 167 South Harris avenue, Mr. Carlos Brown was severely burned in a gasoline explosion caused by escaping fumes while securing a supply of gasoline. A 55-gallon tank exploded destroying the garage and machine therein. Mr. Brown suffered slight burns on the face and one ankle; also severe ones on his hands and arms. He is convalescing.

WORK AWAY YOUR TROUBLES

Man at His Best, and Happiest, When Physically and Mentally Busy, Says Writer.

You can't overwork. God Almighty intended this wonderful mechanism called the human body to work. It is working all the time. Did you ever think of that? Think of it once more! This heart of yours pumps on 72 times a minute, from the moment that it takes its first beat, until it dies, at fifty-six years, or sixty years, or one hundred. It pumps 4,320 times an hour, 103,680 times a day.

Everything in us is constructed to work. Everything in us is constructed to carry big loads, big burdens.

This human hand—it's a masterpiece of mechanics. This spinal column—it's constructed to hold your body up, and teams of horses pulling in opposite directions could scarcely pull it apart.

God intended us to work. He made it necessary for us to work. Whether you know it or not, your day's work lights up the glad side of your ledger. And idleness is loss.

The happiest moments in the life of a man are those in which he is at his best, intellectually and physically, working at high speed with the greatest necessity for good judgment and quick action. Then, if he has troubles, he forgets them in the exhilaration of the hour. Whether he knows it or not, his actual, every-day employment is his biggest boon to happiness.—Charles E. Lawyer, in Forbes Magazine.

ACTION OF WATER ON FIRE

Just What Takes Place When the Liquid is Employed for Quenching Flames.

Practically, water thrown on a fire drowns out the blaze. Scientifically, however, the water absorbs so much of the heat in the fire that the temperature of the fire is lowered so that the oxygen will not combine with the carbon in the burning material and the fire goes out.

It is peculiar that water, which is made of oxygen and hydrogen, will put out a fire which requires hydrogen and oxygen before it will burn. This is true, however, as the oxygen and hydrogen composing the water already have been burned or heated to a high temperature when they combined as water, and so, as no substance or gas that has been burned once can be burned again, the combination of the two gases in the form of water will not burn when thrown on the fire.

To the contrary, the heat of the burning fire is lowered by the water so that the oxygen of the air cannot combine with it and, lacking the oxygen, the fire is extinguished.—Philadelphia Ledger.

"By Hook or by Crook."

"By hook or by crook," an expression denoting that a person is determined to accomplish a certain thing, no matter how, was first used in Ireland in 1172. At that time, Strongbow, the great warrior, invaded Ireland and swore he would take it "by hook or crook," meaning two towns of great importance in those days near the port of Waterford.

Some authorities, however, claim that Strongbow was using a punning allusion. Ancient forest rights in England and Ireland allowed the poor to carry away dead or damaged wood for fuel. The people were not permitted to use an ax or a saw but were supposed to pick up the loose branches scattered about. The customary method of removal was to use hooked poles or "crooks" with which the dead branches could be pulled down and hauled home.

"Running the Gauntlet."

The custom of punishing a culprit by forcing him to "run the gauntlet" practiced in the Seventeenth century, is said to have originated during the "Thirty Years' war" (1618-48) and to have been adopted by European armies as a mode of punishment. The culprit was stripped to the waist and then obliged to run repeatedly between two lines of soldiers facing one another each of whom struck at him with a short stick or, switch. The word "gantlet," as here used, has not the meaning usually given it—that of an iron glove—but is simply a corruption of gantlope or gatlope, and is derived from the Swedish gatlop, meaning "running down a lane." Some etymologists, however, derive the word from the German gassenlaufen, which means "running the lane," and others from the Dutch gangloopen, having the same meaning.

The Victor's Privilege.

The man and the boy met at the entrance to the little park, and walked down the path together. The man noted the dishevcled appearance of the lad and questioned him.

"What's the trouble, sonny? You look like you'd been in a wreck?"

"Nope. Been in a fight," the boy informed him carelessly.

"Been in a fight, eh?" the man repeated. "And who whipped?"

"I did, of course," the boy answered, contentedly. "If I hadn't whipped do you think I'd be tellin' you about it?"—Kansas City Star.

Aurora Australis.

During one of the British expeditions to the antarctic regions, more than sixty observations were made of the aurora australis, the southern counterpart of our northern lights. The appearance of the light resembled that presented in the arctic regions. But the maximum frequency did not occur during the months of the long polar night, and the phenomenon was most intense at the time of the equinoxes, when the sun is perpendicular over the equator, and daylight is simultaneous at both the north and the south pole.

Flowers and Seasons.

The relation of the colors of flowers to the seasons has attracted the attention of a Canadian professor, who finds that of 539 flowering plants in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, about one-third have white flowers. Yellow flowers come next, and comprise about one-quarter of the total. Purples and blues form about one-ninth or tenth. White flowers are commonest in April and June, whereas yellow are frequent in July, August and September. One can not help noticing that the spring flowers have delicate colors as a rule, whites or pale pinks, yellows and blues, whereas the autumn flowers have much stronger shades of yellow, blue and purple.

What Produces Freckles.

Old Sol is the real freckle dispenser. His rays, on their way to earth, fall alike on the just and the unjust and so the just and the unjust have freckles; that is, those who have skins built for freckles—generally persons of fair complexion and hair. Some people never have freckles because their skin is not the same as that of the freckled ones.

The action of the sun on the skin of persons of light complexion causes a yellowish or brownish substance to exude from the second layer of skin and forms freckles. Some people even have permanent freckles, but in most people the freckles disappear when the summer is ended and they are bundled up in warm clothing when out of doors.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Right Twin for Jerry

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

©, 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"That's my ultimatum, Jerry," said Jerry's father slowly, and the finality of his tone lent emphasis to his words. "I'm tired of your devil-may-care ways and the wild crowd of young people you travel with. Cut it out, my son, find a girl like your mother, marry her and settle down. Or else get out and shift for yourself!"

Young Jerry Cowles slumped in his chair, looked moodily up at his father towering over him. "Harsh words, dad!" he said soberly.

"That may be," growled his parent, "but I mean them nevertheless. You've been no good to me or to yourself since you got out of college. Tearing around in that car of yours, smashing speed limits, fox trotting all night—Lord, Jerry, when I was your age—" he paused in exasperation as a mental picture passed before his eyes of himself at twenty-three, an industrious husband and father.

"I know, dad, but the times—"

"The times be hanged!" ejaculated the older man. "They are overworked nowadays as an excuse for any tomfoolery. What you need is a wife and a home to give you a sense of responsibility. Only, mind you, I have no use for the sort of girl you seem to fancy. Surely, somewhere, there's a girl who isn't all speed fiend, jazz, cigarette devotee, fashion plate—"

Jerry winced. Was his father visualizing Becky Lenox, to whom at least some of those terms applied? Becky Lenox, with whom he was frightfully in love!

"Tell you what I'll do, Jerry. Marry the sort of girl I would welcome as my daughter-in-law, and I'll furnish your home for a wedding present, settle on you now what would likely come to you on my death and take you into the business as junior partner. I'm that anxious to have you make a success of your life!"

Jerry rose impulsively. "I—I—thank you, dad," he said. "I'll think it over."

But as he turned away to dress for the Lenox dance at the Lawn club his heart was heavy within him. Becky was a little peach, but never in all the world would she meet his father's old fashioned requirements. Yes, dad belonged to a bygone generation to whom a love for the prevailing style of dancing spelled no less than total moral depravity and for whom the slightest hint of artificiality in a girl's complexion utterly dimmed, and damned, whatever else of beauty she possessed.

"Harsh Words, Dad!" He Said Soberly.

It was during the intermission on the cool, darkened veranda that Jerry poured out his woes to the sparkling, daringly dressed piece of femininity that was Becky. And he used his predicament as an excuse for letting Becky know that he loved her.

"You see, dear," he wound up earnestly. "I wouldn't speak before because I had nothing to offer you. And now, why, I'm afraid just because you're so gloriously up to date and—oh, snappy and full of pep that dad won't see you're the real thing and the only thing for me! You ought to have been born dowdy and homely and with spectacles or—why, Becky, what's up?"

For Becky had jumped up and was pirouetting wildly about. "An- iden old top!" she cried. And Jerry wondered if his mother had ever called his father that. "Introduce Bess to your father—but marry me!"

For Becky had a twin, identical in looks, but very opposite in tastes and characteristics. Given over to philology philosophy and philanthropy, she had lately taken to wearing huge tortoise shell spectacles which lent her an air of as great a seriousness as one could wish. Certainly, one look at her and Jerry's father would realize that his son would be under a calm and steadying influence.

Now, because Jerry was desperately in love and so temporarily blinded to all else, he fell right in with Becky's scheme; nor did he worry about the intended deception of his father. Once married to Becky his father would surely capitulate to her charms and forgive the trick played upon him.

"If father approves of your sister we'll elope. How about it, dear?" And Becky whispered "Yes," as would have most any girl held close in the arms of a nice youth like Jerry.

With characteristic energy Jerry put in motion at once the wheels of his plan. Told his father he was engaged to one of the Lenox twins and invited him out to supper with them to meet her. Sure he'd be surprised at the sort of girl she was.

Bess, under heaven knows what inducements from Becky, agreed to help matters along, and did her best to be entertaining. Ably she denounced the evils of modern existence, punctuating her remarks with pertinent allusions to ancient civilizations, theories of Kant, and slum conditions abroad. Jerry's father sat as one absorbed and when Jerry finally led her away to a play down in the village, he gazed after them with an expression in his eyes which would vaguely have bothered Jerry.

It was late that evening when Jerry, figuratively mopping his brow, deposited his companion at the door of the Lenox home. He was anxious to get back to his father and learn the verdict.

But as he turned away, the door opened softly behind him.

The next moment Becky herself was in his arms. "Oh, Jerry," she moaned. "I've spent the most awful day. I've had nothing to do but think how we weren't being fair to your father, and he is just right about not wanting you to marry a flyaway creature like me, and I'm sick of this jazzy life, anyhow. I'm going to settle down and—oh, you didn't turn around and fall in love with Bess?"

"Why, my little sweetheart!" Jerry drew her close. "Your sister is a fine girl, and all that, but as for loving her instead of you! As for father—we'll tell him all about it and take the consequences!"

But when Jerry reached home he got the surprise of his life.

"Jerry, my boy," said his father, "I take back all I said about the crowd you travel with. Good Lord, Schopenhauer—law of Malthus—Aztec verbs. Thunderation, boy, how will you stand it? Couldn't you have picked out a happy medium?"

And Jerry, laughing, settled down to explain that he had.

EMPLOYED ART OF FLATTERY

How Disraeli Succeeded in Securing the Full Confidence of His Royal Mistress, Victoria.

It was after the untimely death of her husband at the age of 42 that Queen Victoria became the victim of a settled melancholy. For 20 years after that event she continued to wear mourning, took little or no interest in the social life of her subjects, and made a slave of herself in her correspondence and in her interviews with her ministers on public questions and the details of government.

It was not until Disraeli became premier that the queen emerged from the shadow of bereavement. He fascinated her by his rhetoric and poetic style of address. Gladstone, she said, used to speak to her as if she was a public meeting, but Disraeli remembered that she was a lonely woman with a hungry heart. He fed this hunger in letters that were almost affectionate in tone. He called her Gloriana and Titania, queen of the fairies, and in a thousand similes ministered to her self-esteem. He waved the magic wand of flattery and Titania began to enjoy life once more.

So the queen in her old age became popular with her subjects and revealed those mellow graces, those milder attributes, that made her beloved and revered at home and abroad.—Detroit News.

A young man who had been reared in a non-christian home told his employer one day as they were talking about being religious: "There is something that makes me religious" and when asked what it was, replied: "I was reading Mr. Babson's statement that he had never recommended the placing of a public utility of any kind in a place where there were not a sprinkling of churches. And I thought the church must have a good influence or Mr. Babson would not have said it."

Mr. Babson is the greatest statistician in the country, and he considers it a poor place to invest money where there are no churches or public school. Bankers are of the same opinion, and will not locate a bank or make any investment where there are no churches or schools.

Find a Mummified Dinosaur.

The vast ice fields of Siberia have in many instances acted as a natural cold-storage plant for the preservation of the flesh of the mammoth, this prehistoric cousin of the elephant, having been dug out of his chilly grave intact on numerous occasions. It has always been supposed, however, that this was the only instance in which anything more than the bare bones of the fauna of past geological epochs had come down to us. Doubtless this mammoth will continue to stand unique in this respect; but he is no longer unapproached. There has recently been put on exhibition in the Senkenberg museum, Frankfort-am-Main, a dinosaur skeleton which carries with it a considerable portion of the skin of the animal, in mummified form. In particular the epidermis over the animal's back is present practically intact. The skeleton has been mounted in flying position, and makes altogether an impressive exhibit.—Scientific American.

TOOK REINDEER TO ENGLAND

A hundred years ago it was thought that the mountain forests of Great Britain might be colonized by reindeer from Lapland, and an account was given in 1821 in an issue of the Observer, London, of the extraordinary sagacity displayed by them when a number were brought to England at the instigation of an eminent naturalist, Mr. Bullock. The herd was accompanied by a Laplander, to whom the animals were attached and to whose wishes they were usually obedient. All went well till they arrived at the place of embarkation, when the herdsman invited the deer to follow him to the boat. When the leader of the herd put his foot upon the float leading to the vessel he started back in alarm. It was the first unsteady ground he had ever trod. Fresh invitations to follow the herdsman and fresh investigations followed, the whole herd looking on and watching the proceedings, placing entire confidence in the captain, not attempting to move till he gave them a signal that all was well. After a time he seemed to be reassured and in a majestic manner entered the vessel, where he trod upon every plank and carefully examined everything. When he had satisfied himself that it was perfectly safe, he uttered a kind of snort, when the hitherto passive herd bounded into the boat and in three minutes all had embarked. The account continues that the vessel was overloaded and the intelligent beast indicated this to his followers. "Were we not assured of the fact, we could hardly credit it," the reporter continues. "As he had intimated other things, he also intimated this to his followers. No sooner was this done than the individual deer he appealed to leaped into another boat."

The experiment did not prove a success, but the marked intelligence of the reindeer made a deep impression upon the public.

HOW THE MOLLUSKS TRAVEL

Attach Themselves to Water Fowl and Are Thus Transported for Considerable Distances.

One of the problems that continually confronts the naturalist is to account for the distribution of identical forms of life among widely separated localities. Investigation frequently shows that this has been accomplished in many ways that appear quite simple when once discovered, although one would hardly have thought of them in advance of their actual detection.

Some interesting facts have been brought out concerning the dispersion of fresh-water mollusks, accounting for their appearance in remote and isolated ponds. It appears that water fowl play an important part in this work. Ducks have been known to carry mussels attached to their feet a hundred miles or more. Bivalve mollusks not infrequently cling to the toes of wading birds, and are thus transported for considerable distances. Even aquatic insects have been known to carry small fresh-water mollusks attached to their legs.

In such manner does Nature compel the various inhabitants of the earth to assist one another whether they will or not.

Seeks Origin of Dancing.

Can it be, in any sense, possible to conjecture that the origin of dancing came from the desire to escape from one's self, into an imaginary world?

In that case, it might also have been a form of madness, as one finds it in the Dionysian intoxication at the Attic festivals, when wine and the deities, the satyrs and the maenads, were closely linked together, writes Arthur Symons in the Forum.

Certainly, even now, one of the best means in escaping from one's self is dancing: Under fixed conditions, the only one. The question is: Can one ever escape from one's self?

There are so many means. There is, for instance, a rapture in the dance which intoxicates every sense to a point of human infinity; that is, while one is dancing. After, comes the recoil. No rapture can ever be measured; while one endures it, it has no limits. But, alas! for one's finite nature, nothing lasts.

American Democracy.

Whoever in America desires to better his fellowmen must act by influencing their intellect. If he wishes to see no idle man and no poor man in the land, he must take care that there shall be no ignorant man. Ignorance is the mother of superstition and misery. Men are better in proportion as they are wiser. In whatever direction we look we see the improvement. The physical man is more powerful, the intellectual man is more perfect, the moral man more pure. The morality of a nation is the aggregate of the morality of the individuals. A lazy man is necessarily a bad man; an idle is necessarily a demoralized population.—John William Draper.

Miss Had Used Sleeves.

About a year ago I was having a fancy dress made. When the sleeves were finished, they mysteriously disappeared. I looked for them for days, but could not find them. Last week I took the back off the organ to clean it, and imagine my surprise to find my sleeves made into a mouse nest in the bottom of the organ.—Chicago Journal.

MOLIERE UNHAPPY IN LIFE

Great French Playwright and Comedian Seems to Have Had the Usual Fate of Ge

Armande Bejart, beautiful, witty and quick tempered, an actress of rare ability and charm, was the wife of Moliere, the leading comedian of his time, and one of the greatest in the world's history. Under twenty, when she married the playwright, then a man of forty, given to spells of moodiness and abstraction and endowed with all the eccentricities of genius. It would, as one biographer has said, be little short of a miracle had the marriage been a happy one.

Attracted by her beauty, the playwright, once married, did little to show his love. His interest in his work kept him away from his young bride a large part of the time, and the old story of the neglected wife was the result. Armande loved admiration, and when she did not get it from her husband, she flirted, harmlessly to be sure, but sufficiently to arouse his fierce jealousy.

The pair quarreled constantly, even bringing their disagreements before Louis XIV, with whom they were favorites. When their first son was born Louis acted as godfather. In spite of their stormy life, they were passionately attached to each other, and Moliere wrote many of his plays to provide Armande with suitable roles. They were married only 11 years when he died.

WOULD PROVE HE WROTE JOB

Australian Naturally Indignant When His Claim to Authorship Became Matter of Dispute.

Here is an extract from an Australian paper: For the first time since I established my lending library in Melbourne a new patron the other day took out the Bible on the customary terms, value down, and 3d. charged for the reading. He had come in asking for "The Book of Job." He looked like a person fresh from Toodlembuck as I ran a puzzled eye over him. "The Book of Job?" said I. "I haven't it separately, but you'll find it in the Bible." "Gimme one, and show me where," said the caller. I pointed out the Book of Job, and my new customer took the Bible out. He returned it on the third day. "When was that writ?" said he. I explained that it was about 2,000 years since it was first put upon the market. "I s'pose an old chap name of Job up at the Slip couldn't have writ it?" I didn't think it at all likely. "I always told the misses Job was a liar," said the new customer. He went away, but about a week later I received a letter from the man. It assured me that Horis Job, livin' there, did write this book, and what's more said he'd do it again if any city bloke disbelieved him.

Harold's parents had just recently moved to town, and one of his little friends invited him to a party. Harold went, but did not enjoy himself. The games seemed so silly, and the girls were always giggling, and Harold was not sure that he was not the subject of their mirth. He endured it for a while, but finally slipped from the room, expecting to leave unnoticed.

But just as he was opening the door, the little host's mother saw him and asked: "Why, what's the matter, Harold?"

To which he replied: "Aw, there's nothing the matter with Harold, but he are going home."

One of our war heroes, "Bill" Chambers, with his father and mother, of King avenue, spent a most delightful day with Mr. and Mrs. Vanmeter, 112 South Oakley avenue, last Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Vanmeter being highly honored, their home being the only home "Bill" has visited since being wounded on his birthday anniversary four years ago. Mrs. Vanmeter's bountiful dinner was enjoyed by "Bill" and all that partook of it. A very pleasant afternoon was enjoyed by all who so kindly aided in entertaining him. They returned home late in the evening expressing appreciations to the host and hostess.

Seventeen classmates of Mary Elisabeth Cannon dressed in masquerade costumes, spent Thursday evening from four to seven before Hallowe'en at her home on Highland avenue. A supper appropriate to the day was served and school games played. The house was lighten with jack-o'-lanterns, owl lanterns, and corn stalks were found in corners of the rooms. A most interesting part of the entertainment was a series of "stunts" in which the children entered with grace and talent and volunteered delightful contributions to an impromptu program.

After regular business meeting of Westwood Pythian Temple a surprise party was sprung for Mr. and Mrs. Albert Henry. Mrs. Henry, a bride of last month, was Miss Helene Smith. The members of the Temple presented them with a beautiful electric lamp. A bride's cake baked by Mrs. Dora Johnson, was presented by Miss Esther Loudenslager and cut by the bride. #### First Firemen.

Fire-fighting organizations of men are known to have existed in the Second century before Christ. Heron of Alexandria, 200 years before the Christian era, in an old manuscript which has escaped destruction, described an hydraulic machine used in Egypt during the time of the Ptolemies. It was composed of two brass cylinders resting on a wooden base with pistons fitted into them—in its principles practically like our present engine.

The Romans had squads of men to carry water in "hamne," or light vases, to the scene of an outbreak, where it was projected on to the fire by those in charge of the "siphones" or hand pumps. The precise nature of this instrument has not been determined, but from specimens found in excavations it must have been much like the old-fashioned syringe used by gardeners. These large organizations of men gave the Roman authorities trouble by their turbulence.

Mention is made of the medieval use of forcing pumps as fire engines at Augsburg in 1518.

The London Plane Tree.

Citizens of London have reason to be grateful to the plane tree, which beautifies their city more than any other English tree. It is called the London plane. With lofty dignity, clothed in pleasant green, it stands quietly in the parks and squares, a cheering sight to many hurrying workers. Sometimes it is stunted, but when it is free to expand it becomes one of the finest trees in the country. Some of them in Kew Gardens, "oh! so near to London," are magnificent. Many London children, who know little of the beauties of nature in the country, are familiar with the London plane. It is such a hardy tree that it flourishes in many strange corners of the city. It is strange to think that its origin is unknown. It is pleasant to know that it came to London as an outcast from the great family of trees, and, in return for the sanctuary afforded, has given the great city of its best.

Ireland's "Mayflower."

Students of Anglo-American history have directed attention to the fact that Ireland also had her Mayflower. This was the Eaglewing, which, no later than 1636, set sail with a full passenger list of Ulster men for the American colonies. There were forty passengers, among whom were four ministers. Ill luck began at once, for unconquerable winds drove the vessel to the Scottish coast. A leak then held the ship in the "Kyles of Bute." Starting again, she achieved mid-Atlantic, but there a hurricane did much damage and caused such general discouragement that finally the Irish pilgrims made up their minds that Providence was frowning on their emigration, and turned their vessel back to Ireland.

PERSISTENCE WINS THE RACE

Man Who Is Willing to Devote Himself to the "Steady Grind" Will Always Be Victor.

The fellow who knows how to grind gets there in the end.

Some people are always looking for sky-rockets. They believe human affairs are guided by the genius of luck. They believe in a Santa Claus for adults. They expect to wake up some morning and find themselves wealthy, famous and powerful. But the chariots of fire never appear. The golden lands that lie at the end of the rainbow are never reached. Across their firmament the meteors of great success never flash.

If there is anything that a well-balanced man over thirty ought to know it is that Genius is generally nothing but Hard Work disguised in fancy clothes.

It's the steady grind day after day in the face of ups and downs that makes a fellow's dreams come true.

Constant application, persistency and dogged determination are the qualities that win at last.

Shaking dice with fate is a fool's game. History records the victories of no man who was not a day laborer in life's harvest field.

Good luck is the rarest flower that blows, and it blossoms mostly in the gardens of imagination.

PROPER METHOD OF READING

Bacon's Advice to "Weigh and Consider" Is as Valuable Today as When First Given.

Bacon is right, as he generally is, when he bids us read not to contradict and refute, not to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and to consider. Yes, let us read to weigh and to consider. In the times before us that promise or threaten deep political, economical, and social controversy, what we need to do is to induce our people to weigh and consider. We want them to cultivate energy without impatience, activity without restlessness, inflexibility without ill-humor. I am not going to preach to you any indifference to money, or to the pleasures of social intercourse, or to the esteem and good-will of our neighbors, or to any other of the consolations and necessities of life. But, after all, the thing that matters most, both for happiness and for duty, is that we should strive habitually to live with wise thoughts and right feelings.—"Studies in Literature," Lord Morley.

At a meeting held at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church recently the pastors of the Hilltop churches organized The Hilltop Ministerial Association by choosing the Rev. J. M. Wenrich, pastor of the Hilltop Lutheran Church, President, and Rev. R. E. Shields of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, Secretary. Arrangements are being made for a Union Thanksgiving service by this Association. There are nine churches represented and it is the first time such an organization has ever been started on the Hilltop.

Susan Rides in a Parlor Car

By LAURA MONTGOMERY.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

While the Simpsons had lived in Emington they had had a hard time to make both ends meet. After they had moved three stations down the line Joseph began to get more work and Mrs. Simpson was able to use her energies for her family instead of helping out the earnings of her husband by doing two washings a week at home. The same energy that had impelled her to slave over the washtubs was now diverted into other channels and she constantly urged Susan, her nineteen-year-old daughter, to try and blossom out as a well-dressed young lady.

"If you'd just hold your head up, Susan, and study hard there's no telling where you might land," she prodded, stitching away at a too-elaborate white frock for the girl.

"But, ma, we're just ordinary village folk. Everybody knows to a cent what we have, as who's other? I don't want to land anywhere except—" here a delicate pink crept up into her freckled cheeks, that were a satiny white where the golden dust of the freckles had not come—"in Charlie's cottage. I used to wonder who would want to marry me, and of all the fellows I never thought of him. He's so strong and tall. Don't you think he is the best looking man in Emington, ma?"

Her mother glanced down the brown ribbon of road that led toward the quaint village. The small house with the steep green roof was on an ambitious rise of ground that nearly achieved the distinction of being a hill. She could see the roofs of the village and the curling wreaths of gray smoke that swept heavily along the hot clouds above the single-track railroad.

"I often think, Susan," said ma dreamily, "what the railroad might bring. Most any one might come in on the noon train—yes," she said in answer to her daughter's questioning glance. "Charlie is good looking, but you might marry better than a blacksmith. You are fresh and pretty——"

The dawning pink became a mortified scarlet. "Ma, how you talk, as though I marry to better myself. I love Charlie and I'm proud to think that I'll live in the darling brown cottage that is nearly finished."

Ma's tired, ambitious head wagged sagely over her sewing. Susan should be married forward in spite of her silly scruples. Ma had insisted upon Susan taking a few singing lessons and the girl was to sing a solo at Gleaner's hall at Emington. When the time came for the entertainment ma went about with a mysterious, secretive smile on her pursed-up lips. She had finished the fussed-up white lace frock with its intricate trimmings of tiny ruffles and she had even sent away (through a mail-order catalogue) and bought a pair of white satin slippers with wobbly heels that tottered unless Susan remembered to walk very carefully.

"I guess," said ma when she had fastened the last hook and ribbon and turned the embarrassed Susan around for the family gaze, "that no one who looks at her today will remember that I used to take in two big washings a week to keep us going. With Susan's voice and looks there's no telling how far she'll go."

"Ain't she goin' to Emington to sing tonight?" queried Freddy excitedly.

"Stupid, we're all goin'," yelled Lucy, holding out a tightly braided head. "Ma, iron my plaits now so they'll be good and fuzzy. Shall I have a white dress like Susan's after she's married to Charlie?"

"You never can tell who might come in on the train," mused ma, twitching at Susan's sash. "Be sure you sing just as loud as you can and don't let that Spriggs girl think she can sing better'n you just because she's taken six months. You've got a natural soprano."

Susan, nervous and uneasy, nodded mutely. If her throat felt the same when the programme opened she knew that she would be unable to sing a single note, but she remained silent.

"Now," said ma grandly as she emerged from the ticket office with the tickets, "I've done something big for Susan. Here's the Banner coming now, down the track. You children and pa stand ready to hop on, and be sure and turn back some seats, so's we can all ride facing each other. You, Susan, are going to ride in the parlor car. Here's the ticket for your ride. Mr. Meadows sure stared when I asked him to reserve a chair in the parlor car for today. I've read that only the best people travel that way, and there's no telling who——" Her eager voice was drowned in the approaching roar of the Banner train from St. Louis, and before the dazed Susan could ask how much the reservation cost she had been helped up the steps by the colored porter and the train flashed off.

Susan kept her eyes fixed on the flying landscape for a few miles, then timidly raised her eyes. Her fellow passengers paid scant attention to the little freckled country girl in her unsuitable frock of lace and floppy hat. She vaguely sensed the difference in clothing and tried to keep her white satin shod feet under the footrest. She was glad when her station was called and she tottered to the vestibule to descend. At the farther end of the train she saw Charlie gayly helping down ma and the numerous members of ma's family.

"Why, where's Susan?" she heard him exclaim as pa gingerly stepped down from the high step of the day coach and counted heads.

"Susan," ma's voice was replete with pride, "came in the parlor car. You know, she's agoin' to sing at the ball tonight."

Charlie's face clouded. He went slowly toward the small, white-clad figure tottering along anxiously toward him. "Susan, I feel ashamed of you," he said sternly. "Why should you ride in a chair car and your ma go in the day coach? If you've got such notions as that I don't think you're cut out for a working man's wife. Is a duke coming to take you to the hall or do you want me to help you along in those satin shoes?"

Susan's eyes misted suddenly, but she was too shy to reply. Pa, who had followed, intervened.

"Susan didn't know that she was to ride in the parlor car. It's her ma's doings. You see," pa winked at the disapproving young man, "I've never been of much account in the family and ma has had to look out for our future, but," he sent a cautious glance back to where his better-half was talking volubly with a group of old neighbors, "I guess I'll have to begin and curb her some. Now that she ain't busy with the two washings a week her mind is running toward society-doings and she plagues Susan about acting like a young lady instead of a nice little girl who can cook the best meals in the country."

"I thought my dress was pretty fancy," murmured Susan with a contrite smile in the direction of her intrepid mother, "but I hated to say anything after ma worked so hard decking me out."

"Oh," Charlie tucked the sunburned little hand under his arm with a belligerent glance at a traveling man nearby, "that's it. Say, Susan, I thought for a minute that you'd grown above me. Want to stop in at the ice cream parlor and get something? All the family, too," he added generously.

Well Disguised, She Thought.

My English professor was always immaculate, and was most careful to have his ties and shirts harmonize.

One day we were asked to write a character sketch of some person we knew. I chose the professor as my subject, being careful, of course, to disguise the fact. Among other things I stated that I could picture this kind of a man keeping spotless when a boy, and that his mother probably tied his curls back with a blue ribbon.

Imagine my embarrassment when the next day my theme was returned with a fine grade, and the single notation, "No. It was pink."—Chicago Tribune.

The Healthy Eskimo.

It is said that the Eskimos of the remotest north are the healthiest people you can find anywhere. Contact with white folks has, however, brought deterioration and demoralization. The influence of civilization has been bad, and may be worse; it may even result in the extinction of the hardy race. Only when they are left wholly to their own devices are the Eskimos healthy, and this is indeed remarkable, for their devices are few and the hardships of their lives are many.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE PLATE

How the Spirit of Giving Was Manifested in the Churches a Hundred Years Ago.

Fresh-laid eggs are frequently deposited on the contribution plate in some of the backwoods Episcopal churches of the South. Which goes to show that the spirit of giving hasn't changed so very much in the hundred years or so of the Church Missionary society. The first report of the society dated May 30, 1823, was dug up the other day, and while it shows no contribution of eggs, a score of other articles of merchandise seem to have found their way to the plate from the people who gave "according to their means." This report, for instance, shows that back in 1821 David Snethan gave a basket of groceries for the support of the missionaries; Stephen North contributed a medicine chest; William Rawland, a cross-cut saw; Joe and John Needles, two sieves; S. Massey, a coffee mill. John and T. Clully contributed, alas, a singularly empty gift—a safe. John Burson came along with a tub, whether bath or wash is not stated. C. Buckley is credited on the books with "deduction on hat," $1.50; John McAllister donates a thermometer. Among other miscellanies are hymn books, slates, spades, shoes, trousers, chairs, soap, bridles and locks. Finally from one Richard Markall there is a hogshead of tobacco, which encourages the hope that some good missionary of the church in his lonely station afar off enjoyed a comfortable smoke, says the publicity department of the Protestant Episcopal church.

HORSE A PRACTICAL JOKER

South American Physician Tells of Quadruped With Well-Developed Sense of Humor.

Have horses a sense of humor? A South American doctor has one which is said to be fond of a practical joke.

Visiting a farmhouse, the doctor tied the animal to a post near which hung a rope attached to a large bell, used as a dinner signal for the workmen. Then he went in to see his patient.

A few minutes later the bell rang violently. The doctor looked out, but could see nothing. Again the bell rang. At the third ring the doctor concealed himself behind a tree in the yard, and kept watch on the bell-rope.

Then, to his astonishment, he saw his horse lift up his head, seize the rope between its teeth, and give it a violent pull. After that the doctor sprang out and faced the animal, which put on a look of complete innocence.

Poking his nose into a basket in which a cat lay curled up, the same horse got a nasty scratch from pussy for his pains. The animal, taking careful aim, kicked the cat and basket sky-high and then trotted off with a low chuckle of glee.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Ancient English Food Laws.

There were pure food laws in England as long ago as the year 1381, and those who violated them received punishment to fit the crime.

The Guildhall librarian has been exploring an old box of parchments deposited long ago with the corporation by the Poulters company.

Habits are long-lived in the city. Poultry has been sold since the middle of the Fourteenth century at Leadenhall, where the city men today buy a bird to take home in the evening. But nowadays a goose costs more than sixpence. On the other hand, a poulterer who unluckily sells bad pigeons has got to stand in the pillory while the pigeons are burned under his nose.

This happened in 1381 to a "poulter" who sold 16 pigeons "in contempt of the city and deceit of the people for that the same were putrid and an abomination to mankind."—Lincoln Correspondence of the New York World.

Bust Shows Two Natures.

The United Service club is one of London's famous clubs in Pall Mall for officers of the twin British services, the navy and the army. Busts of naval and military heroes adorn the hall. The duke of Wellington with his stately and aristocratic look gazes down on members as they pass through the main entrance. Honesty, pride and dignity are written there.

But a head of Lord Nelson at the side is more interesting. Each side of the face is modeled differently, so that the impression of a man of the world is given as you look at the portrait from the left, and of a dreamer as you look at it from the right. In the one case the modeling is firm, in the other soft. Even the eyes, for both are shown, are different. The bust is a replica by the famous English artist, Flaxman, the original of which is in possession of the family.—Christian Science Monitor.

HEALTH HINTS FROM BIBLE

Proof That More Than Spiritual Consolation Is Contained in the Pages of Scripture.

If you want to keep well and avoid doctors' bills, study your Bible. That would seem to be the moral drawn from the remarks of Sir James Cantlie, famous English surgeon, who pointed out that medicine rests on the law of Moses.

"There is not one page of the Bible which does not teach us some hygienic fact," he said.

For instance, the wrong use of milk is the cause of indigestion and bad teeth. Moses laid down the salutary law that milk should not be drunk until at least two hours after eating fish, three after chicken, and four after meat, but this is disregarded and milk is drunk at meals. No careful Jewish mother gives milk to her child when meat is served.

Sir James points out how the dangers of plagues carried by rats was learned from the Bible. When he was a doctor at Hongkong there was a bubonic plague and he and others searched the encyclopedia for information. Then a clergyman came to him and asked him to read the fourth, fifth and sixth chapters of the Book of Samuel, where five models of swellings and three golden images of rats were described as being offered to the God of Israel.

"That's the cause of your plague, these rats," said the clergyman, and on that basis the medical authorities went to work.—Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

Filbert Flam Hereby Makes Public a System Which He Claims to Be Infallible.

There is a cure for absent-mindedness, or almost so, and Filbert Flam has found it, according to the New York Sun. He doesn't talk much about it, but if you mention the matter to him he will confide it to you.

Filbert and Filipo were leaving the office together when Filbert suddenly stopped in the hallway. Filipo was hungry and in a hurry, and Filbert's lack of haste annoyed him.

"Hasten," replied Filipo.

"Wait," cautioned Filbert, and stood a moment in silence. Then a smile broke over his face; he returned to the office for a moment and came back with the box of candy which he had purchased for Mrs. Flam.

"It is infallible," said Filbert.

"What?" asked Filipo.

"It," Filbert repeated, "the system. I used to be very absent-minded, leave things behind, forget appointments, that sort of thing. Never any more. I never leave a place without stopping and saying to myself: 'Filbert, have you left anything? Is there anything you should do? Or haven't you and isn't there?' Sometimes there isn't, but generally there is. It hasn't failed in months."

The Old Homestead.

Its weather beaten exterior, grim against the blue of a summer sky, stands out in plain relief on top of a hill overlooking the irregular line of church spires that mark the city below.

Gay and vari-colored little portulacca blossoms welcome one near the open door, and from the shade of old apple trees comes the scent of violets and mountain lilies.

Down at the well house a tall, blond youth is slowly turning the wheel and watching the chain that winds and winds until the iron-bound bucket appears with its cool, dripping nectar, while he waves a cheery hand to the girl across the orchard, her hands filled with old-fashioned roses that bloom in abundance beside the gray stone wall, lending their radiant color and rich fragrance to the joy of all beholders.

The Old Homestead! To its past, to its present, and its future—and to its memories—forever!—Gertrude Louise Small in the New York Sun.

"Made Money."

The first person to make a counterfeit was Richard Vaughan, a linen draper of Stacord, England, which occurred in 1758. The Bank of England had been in operation for 64 years without ever experiencing the slightest trouble or apprehension in the matter, and would probably have gone on for many years more, but for the ambition of this man to impress his fiancee with a show of his wealth. He handed over to this lady a considerable sum in bank notes, all of which turned out to be of his own manufacture. The fraud was revealed by one of the engravers whose services had been engaged upon one part of the note. He communicated with the authorities, and Mr. Vaughan's enterprise came to tragic end.

"Mamma," said the small boy, "when people are in mourning do they wear black nightgowns?"

"Why, no; of course not."

"Well, don't they feel just as bad at night as they do in the day time?"

An Inaccessible Peak

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Travers' last memory of his sister was a slim gray form leaning against the white pillars of the porch. Her large eyes were still troubled and her fair face very sad. Viola's trouble was a mystery to him—she had always been such a gay, irresponsible creature, and now in the last five years she had sobered into a woman who went about as if her heart was in some other world.

He had racked his brain to think of some reason for her change, and when he had a chance to take a brief vacation he thought of his old classmate, Jimmie Ladd, who had built a studio in the heart of the wilds and had not been seen by civilized man for several years. Old Jimmie, once a wizard among girls, would at least hazard a guess at Viola's preoccupation.

"What the deuce are you doing here?" gasped Jimmie when he gripped Travers' hand. "Anything happened? Everybody well and—happy?" There was a sudden sharpness in his tone.

Travers met the honest scrutiny of those brilliant blue eyes. "All well," he smiled.

"Very well, thanks. No need to ask you how you enjoy solitude—you're hard, and thin, and rugged—man, you've worked yourself to a bone."

"Work agrees with me. I'm very fit these days. There, Sheila, lassie, run away—scoot!" He clapped his hands and the animal leaped upon him playfully. "She belonged to my young brother Bob—you know, he went to Flanders—never came back—" Ladd's face was hidden a moment behind the collie's snowy ruff and then suddenly lifted to show the eyes dulled with pain and the mobile lips grim and unsmiling. "Funny thing, this life we live—one loves it, glorifies it by heroic deeds and is snuffed out, while another who doesn't care a straw whether he stays on or not has to fight out his dreary round of days."

"Has 'The Peak' in Her Room."

"Not you, Laddie!" Travers protested.

A smile crooked the painter's mouth. "I am a cheerful beggar these days, Van; first time I've seen you in years, and I'm giving you an impression of perpetual blue Mondays. Forget it; come see my camp and have a bite to eat. Then I'll give you a private view of what I've been doing lately. Tomorrow you can hunt or fish; today is mine to gloat over you."

"Of course I know you had captured the Wendrel prize."

"Yes."

"And had a room to yourself at the big exhibition. I couldn't go, but Viola was there and bought one of your pictures."

"Yes!"

"'The Peak.' There's something haunting about that picture, Laddie; so much snow, gray ice and such bleak distances. Then the jagged white peak rising stark, alone, with the north wind keen in its face, while the sheltered life of the valleys below moves on peacefully, not knowing the bitter storming of the peak; it is like a lonely man sitting aloof on the top of the world and seeing all that he loved and hoped for pass by. It's heart-breaking!" Travers' pleasant voice grew rough with feeling.

Travers scrutinized his friend's face. The old, happy carelessness, the edge. The man had grown big and rugged, like the mountains which he painted; his erect carriage and the deep cadences of his voice made one think of vast distances, of snow-covered journeys, long winter days amid ice and snow barriers, always alone. Ladd had a way of suddenly withdrawing into a chill silence, aloof from the busy world he had discarded. Jimmie Ladd was frozen. Perhaps the story Travers had to tell of Viola would thaw him out—Jimmy and Viola had always been good friends and so had young Bob Ladd. A sudden thought smote him like a pang. Perhaps it was Bob Ladd's death that had struck the light from Viola's eyes. But it was not until the evening meal was over that Ladd awoke Travers from a long, abstracted silence.

"Did you bring your troubles with you, Van?" he asked.

Travers nodded, his thin lips tightening about his pipe stem. "I brought them to you, hoping you might help. It isn't financial—that's always been all right." He hesitated. How little could he tell and make Jimmie understand? He was incapable of deciding for himself now, and Viola seemed so remote from him—so inaccessible in her lone sorrow. He wanted to help her to happiness. "It is my sister," he said at last.

"Viola? What of her?"

"Everything—"

"I believed her happy always. She married Chalmers."

"She has never married."

"What?"

"Viola has never married, and she is always so sad—so unlike herself that I came to you, man o' the woods, to ask you what might be done. You know what I think of your wisdom—"

"Wisdom?" ejaculated the other bitterly. "Why, Van, I am a fool."

"I thought you might have known some of the old crowd that she went with—you were among them. I wondered if she was especially interested in any one—say, young Bob, your brother. She cried when we read of his death."

Ladd's eyes were somber. "They were playmates, that was all; he was engaged to Molly Gray."

"I want her to be happy," sighed Travers, "but I shall not force her confidence. Thanks for what you have said. She admires your work a lot—has kept track of you—has 'The Peak' in her room; said the other day it was like you, cold and inaccessible."

Ladd smiled bleakly. "Do you really believe she loves any man?" he asked.

Travers stared. "You, Laddie?"

Ladd nodded. "We were engaged—I thought her cold—we quarreled—I came here—thought she was to marry Chalmers. I painted 'The Peak.' I meant it as a reproach for her—she is my inaccessible peak!"

"Great scot! man, and you are her inaccessible peak—twin peaks—twin idiots! Come back East with me tomorrow and see Viola—just catch her staring at your picture with her heart in her eyes—I mean her soul—and you'll believe me."

"I can't leave this place now," said the hermit painter, but his eyes flashed with old fire.

"Let your man keep it, then you and Viola can come back together and honeymoon here; nothing grander—you and Viola and Shiela—"

LARGEST ELM IN AMERICA

West Virginia Conceded to Have the Choicest Specimen, Though Others Are a Close Second.

In an attempt to locate the monarch of all American elms, the American Genetic association discovered a few years ago what is now thought to be the largest specimen of ulmus americana in existence. The trunk of this giant measures 33 feet in circumference. A remarkable record for one small seed! It reached these colossal proportions in the soil of West Virginia.

According to tree experts an elm almost equally large has since been found at Rathbone, Ohio. It measures 32 feet in girth and has a spread of 165 feet. It has five limbs as large as ordinary trees branching out from the main trunk. The age of this majestic specimen is estimated at from 500 to 700 years.

A record quite as remarkable is accredited to "The Great Elm" of Wethersfield, Connecticut. This tree reached the enormous dimensions of 22 feet in girth and 100 feet in height at the estimated age of 250 years.

"The monarch Elm" of Boston, blown down in 1876, was only 22 feet in circumference and 72 in height, while the "Washington Elm" at Cambridge, perhaps the best known of all American trees, can boast only a mere 14 feet of girth and 42 in height.

Island of "Beauty Doctors."

The women of the Marquesas probably have commanded more superlatives than any other human or physical feature of the South seas. They are said to "possess beautiful, luxuriant hair, fine eyes, perfect teeth, a slender, graceful form, a skin of velvet texture and unblemished surface, and their physical attractions are combined with a vivacity of spirit and action." Their use of coconut oil for a massage has been emulated by the belles of more civilized lands, but the tracelike tattooing is one beauty aid which still is peculiarly their own.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Preparedness!

"Bouncey's daughter, eh? Well, she certainly seems sure of herself."

"Sure of herself? I should say she is. Why, if the doctor told her she was going to die, she'd start taking lessons on the harp immediately!"—London Tit-Bits.

Spain Always Agricultural.

Spain is essentially an agricultural country. Seventy per cent of the people who work are engaged in labor on the farms. Only 3½ per cent are engaged in manufactures. Only 1,000,000 out of 27,000,000 belong to labor organizations.

SWEPT OFF ALL VEGETATION

Ancient Records Tell of Visitation of Locusts That Were Followed by Dire Famine.

A passage of locusts in France, in 1613, entirely cut up even to the roots more than 15,000 acres of corn near Arles, and had even penetrated into the barns and granaries, when, as it were by Providence, many hundreds of birds, especially starlings, came to diminish their numbers. Notwithstanding this, nothing could be more astonishing than their multiplication, for the fecundity of the locust is remarkable.

Upon an order issued by the government for the collection of their eggs, more than 2,000 measures were collected, from each of which it was calculated, would have issued nearly two millions of young ones. In 1650 they entered Russia in immense divisions in three places, thence passed over into Poland and Lithuania, where the air was darkened by their numbers. In many parts they lay dead to the depth of four feet. Sometimes they covered the surface of the earth like a dark cloud, loaded the trees, and the destruction which they produced exceeded all calculation. In 1645 immense swarms visited the islands of Formosa and Tayowan and caused such a famine that 8,000 persons died of hunger.

"Voices" of Crickets.

Crickets sing with their wings and not with their legs. And katydids do the same. You do not believe it? Since you were a little child you have been told that crickets made their chirping sounds by rubbing their hind legs together or scraping their legs against their wings or sides, or something like that. At any rate, they made what might be called foot notes or sang by leg power.

Insect students have settled the question. They say that crickets, like nearly all other varieties of singing insects, have "stringulating organs" at the base of their wings. Rubbing these organs together, they produce vibrations and the wings, which are hollow, serve as sounding boards and increase the volume of the sound. The "stringulating organs" look like two small folded wings having saw-like edges. The insect rasps these two saw edges together.

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Social Stunts

A pleasant surprise was given Mrs. Mary Ilderton at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Emma Dowler, 337 S. Eureka Ave. in honor of her seventieth birthday. Covers were laid for sixteen Among the good things to eat was a large birthday cake having seventy candles on it. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. George Distelhorst, Mrs. Anna Distelhorst, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Wheatley, Mrs. Harry Eader, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Hern and daughter Elizabeth Ann Hern; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Dowler, Mr. John Ilderton, Miss Geraldine Dowler, Miss Mary Dowler and Miss Ruth Dowler. A good time was enjoyed by all.

A public recital will be given by Miss Lillian Smoot, eleven years of age. Miss Lillian, a former Hilltop resident, gave a similar program at the Hill Crest Baptist Church several weeks ago and because of such a splendid program and given with much expression and talent, she has been asked to repeat the program. It will be held in the West Broad Street School Auditorium, Friday evening, November 18, 1921, at 8 o'clock. The program will consist of character impersonations, pantomines, physical culture delsarte, with some fine musical numbers. She will be accompanied by Miss Ruth and Ralph Montgomery. No admission will be charged but a silver offering will be taken. The public is most cordially invited to attend and will be more than pleased at a very interesting, entertaining program.
Fred Brown will also sing and Blanch Brown will play the piano.

"Failures of the Misfits" is the theme of the popular lecture which Chester M. Sanford is to give on the Glenwood lyceum course, Tuesday evening, November 22. The purpose of this talk is to guide the young people of the community in choosing their proper vocations. Each of us is better fitted for one kind of work than for any other. Many a man who could succeed in business is a failure as a physician, and vice versa.

The great ambition of this speaker has been to get close to industry. He has been with the miners at their underground work. He has spent days in huge steel mills, glass factories and textile mills. He has had hundreds of conferences with railway officials, mill and mine superintendents, department store managers and heads of other industrial concerns. He approaches his subject from a great variety of ang'e.

THE GREATEST AFFAIR OF THE SEASON

The young married people of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church are organizing a Sunday school class which looks to be a real live wire for work. They have already planned for their opening number, namely, a banquet to be held at the church on the night of Nov. 29, 1921. Now if you are interested and want to enjoy a real live time, be there and be there on time, 6:30 p. m. You will hear more of the class and what it intends to do later on.

Oysters for Thanksgiving at Weber's.

The Woman's Missionary Society of St. Paul's United Evangelical Church, South Warren Ave., will hold their annual Thank Offering Service Sunday evening, Nov. 20th. Mrs. Sager, wife of Rev. N. W. Sager, will be present and bring us a message appropriate to the occasion. Come out and hear her and receive some enthusiasm and inspiration along missionary lines. A program will be given by the young people. Every one holding a Mite Box will please bring them in at this time. All are welcome to this service.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

The Hilltop W. C. T. U. are planing to send to sick and crippled soldier boys at Christmas time, envelopes filled with leaflets, cards, clippings from magazines, notes of cheer, etc. Any reader wishing to share in this blessed Yuletide, may leave an offering of money, cards or clippings at the home of Mrs. M. Gill, 2413 West Broad St., where the envelopes will be filled.

UNION THANKSGIVING SERVICE

Upon the action of the Hilltop Protestant Churches there will be held a Union Thanksgiving Service at the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church Thanksgiving morning at 10:00 a. m. the service to last just one hour. All of the Hilltop pastors will take some part in the service and the Rev. R. T. Stimmel, pastor of the Glenwood M. E. Church will be the speaker of the morning. Let us make this an unusual day and an unusual service of thanks to God for the many blessings which he is giving us as a Community, State and Nation and World. All churches are co-operating in this service and we urge a large attendance. There will be special music.

Today is Donation Day for Friends Reacue Home. On account of scarcity of fruit and vegetables this year, we have not been able to can for winter use as heretofore, so that fruit, vegetables, table and bed linen, towels, blankets, quilts, groceries, infants' garments and money especially are very much needed in this great work of rescuing and caring for the fallen and needy.

We greatly appreciate your former liberal offerings and pray the Lord to abundantly bless and reward you for your kind response to our call in the past.

We thank you in advance for whatever you can spare along the lines above mentioned.

Evangeline Reams, Field Secy.

St. Paul's Evangelical Church began a series of evangelistic meetings last Sunday. The theme on Sunday evening was "The Epheaus Awakening." On Monday evening, "The motives for holding revival meetings." These were stirring messages. Rev. N. W. Sager, pastor of E. Eighth Ave. United Evangelical Church, preached a very helpful and practical sermon on the theme: "The Positive Assurance of Being a Christian," on Tuesday evening. A splendid response was given to the call to a consecration to the task before us, and an earnest endeavor on the part of the individual to have every hindrance to a work of Grace removed was indicated by the many who knelt at the altar.

Get your orders in early for spring delivery for shade trees, fruit, hedge, roses, shrubbery, etc. Free replacement. Call for appointment. Mrs. M. M. Staiger, 134 S. Hague Ave., Hilltop 2983

Origin of Famous Phrase.

There was a time when "Let'er go, Gallagher," meaning start or "cut loose," was heard in all parts of the United States. The exclamation was originated by a Judge Beaver, of Morgan county, Ky., during a trotting meeting in Tippon county.

The judge had entered a mare which was driven by one Gallagher, the city marshal of Harrodsburg. Some of the sporting fraternity, thinking to catch the judge napping, entered a famous fast trotter against his horse. At the end of the first half-mile the two racers approached the wire neck and neck at a 2:40 pace. At this moment the judge shouted:

"Let'er go, Gallagher!"

Gallagher hearing the words, loosed the reins and the mare rushed forward and won by almost a dozen lengths.

"OLD KING COLE"

We all know, in a general way, that the great coal beds had their inception hundreds of thousands of years before man inhabited the earth. We have the guess of scientists, added to the structural formation of many seams, which show fossilized trees, leaves, ferns, and other forms of vegetable life, pointing to the probability that coal had its origin in decaying deposits of vegetable matter during the early stages of the earth's cooling.

Beneath alluvial and glacial deposits, the heat of subterranean fires and the pressure of the mighty waters converted this mass into coal. Just how this was done or what eons of time were consumed in the process are matters of conjecture. However sure the chemist may be of the component parts of coal, he has not yet given us any commercial substitute. The only artificial coal produced in any quantity, which is known to the coal trade, is that dug by the miners conversationally, during their all too frequent periods of inactivity.

APPLE TREES POINT MORAL

All of Us, If We Would, Can Find Satisfaction in a Little Life Dream Coming True.

Oliver Wendell Holmes tells of a man who, in youth, planned to buy a certain piece of land for a homestead, and on one part of it to plant an apple orchard, so that he could have the flowering trees in spring, the ripening fruit in summer and apples to eat and cider to drink in winter, says the Vancouver Sun.

Years passed, the man progressed toward old age; his son grew up, married and had a son. Finally the money was saved, the land bought, and the three men, grandfather, father and grandson, debated the question of planting the apple orchard.

The grandson said it took apple trees seven years to come into bearing, and he could not take any interest in anything happening so far ahead; the father said no one could tell what would happen in seven years, and they had better plant yearly crops; the grandfather said he would plant the apple trees himself, and he did, and lived 14 years, and during the last years of his life enjoyed the sight of the flowering trees and the apples and the cider in the delight and satisfaction of a little life dream come true.

Wherefore, says Doctor Holmes, if the time comes when you must lay down the fiddle and the bow because your fingers are too stiff, and drop the oars because your arms are too weak, and come at last to the reality of spectacles—if the time comes when the fire of life has burned low, that where its flames reverberated there is only the somber stain of regret, and where its coals glowed there are only the white ashes that cover the embers of memory—don't let your heart grow cold, and you may carry cheerfulness and love with you into the teens of your second century, if you can last so long.

BIG PRICE, BUT WORTH IT

England Paid Kingdom for Bill of Rights and Has Never Regretted the Fact.

One writer has aptly observed that England paid a kingdom for the Bill of Rights, but it was worth it. Literally the observation is true, for England presented to Prince William of Orange the British throne at the same moment that the protocol of the Bill of Rights was submitted for his sanction or rejection.

England found herself in a quandary with James II a fugitive in France, and William of Orange, son-in-law of James, with 13,000 Dutch invading the country. Anarchy was imminent. Then to save the country the opposing factions agreed that a parliament should be elected, which should enact a declaration of rights. So in 1689 parliament, duly elected, decided that James had forfeited his throne, and it was offered to William and his wife Mary. The declaration of rights was presented to their majesties in the banqueting hall at Whitehall from a window through which Charles I had stepped out onto the scaffold 40 years before.

Curious Behavior of Yangtze.

The Yangtze, the great muddy river of China, is one of the greatest of streams, and its valley is the most densely populated and closely cultivated river basin in the world. It crosses the whole of China in its 2,000-mile course to the sea. The Yangtze has a different name in almost every province, and pours a flood of diluted mud through half its valley, tingeing the ocean for more than a hundred miles offshore. There are many interesting features of this most interesting river.

When the snows melt in Tibet and the monsoon pours its annual flood on the watershed, the Yangtze rises 80 or 100 feet at Chungking, 70 or 80 feet at Ichang and 40 or 50 feet at Hankau, sweeping in a fierce flood from June to October, and then falling as rapidly as a foot a day.

House in Form of Teapot.

Among the oddest of unusual cottages is the queerly shaped little house by the roadside in the parish of Daideby, near Horncastle, in Lincolnshire, England. It is well known locally as "Teapot Hall." It has so whimsical an outline, and stands so plainly to be seen of all who pass along this road, that it is almost as famous in its way as Lincoln Minster itself. The story purporting to account for the name of it is that a merchant-skipper, captain many years ago of one of the once-famous East India clippers, retiring from the sea, built himself this extremely modest dwelling, and fashioned it, in allusive mood, in the shape of a teapot, the

"DEATH AGONIES" PURE MYTH

Last Illness May Be Painful, but the Moment of Dissolution Is Without Suffering.

Recent study has led physiologists to the conclusion that the brain may live for 20 minutes or half an hour after a person has apparently "given up the ghost."

The heart, taken out of the body, will continue to beat for 24 hours if a stream of oxygenated blood be kept flowing through it.

Death from loss of blood is attended by no pain. The ancients, appreciating this fact, commonly had resort to "opening the veins" when they sought to commit suicide.

Drowning is an easy death, described by persons who have survived the process as "like falling asleep." It is said to be more painful to be resuscitated than to drown.

In the "dying hour" the sense of smell fails first, then taste, sight, touch and finally hearing.

The "death struggle" or "death agony" is an imaginary phenomenon. Convulsive movements usually occur toward the last, but they are mere nervous reactions of which the dying person is unconscious. A last illness may be painful, but death is painless.

One person in every 1,000 dies a "natural" death—that is to say, of old age. The remaining 999 die of disease.

It often happens in extreme old age that a marked weakening of the mental faculties is observable. Persons thus afflicted are said to be in their "dotage." They have to be cared for like small children. It is a trouble due to structural disintegration of the brain, which, like any other organ, is liable to wear out. As a matter of fact the brain, in these persons, wore out before their bodies.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

GAS TIP CAME AS ACCIDENT

"Invention," if Such It Can Be Called, Is Credited to Eccentric Young Scotsman.

While practically all inventions having to do with the rendition of the essential public utility services have romantic histories, none is more interesting than that of the gas tip, so common in homes and factories where there is gas illumination.

Thomas Murdock, a Scotchman, who is generally referred to as "the father of the gas industry," desired to stop the flow of gas which was burning from an open tube during one of his experiments, more than 100 years ago. To accomplish this, he clapped a thimble over the flame. The thimble had been pierced and the gas coming through the hole in smaller volume was brought into contact with a greater proportion of air at the point of combustion. This incident is said to have been responsible for the origin of the "gas tip."

Murdock was a queer young man, addicted to wearing wooden hats. He made a lantern by fixing a tube in the neck of a gas-filled bladder. The sight of him wandering around at night with the strange beacon filled the neighborhood with dismay and some people suspected him of being in league with Lucifer.

Beautiful Sea Shells

It is a very pleasant hobby for those people who live by the sea to gather on suitable shores the delightful sea shells that lie on the beach among the pebbles or glitter beneath the water. No understanding of conchology is necessary to appreciate the beauty of the shells that invite attention. There is none more delightful to look at for perfection of design than the nightcap, which reminds us vividly of the illustrations to the stories of Charles Dickens. The painted top, the Venus, and lace sea shells are equally attractive. Many artists have derived direct inspiration from these little wonders. The fan tracery in European architecture must have owed its origin to the fan shells, with their exquisite markings. The colors frequently seem to have been put on by hand, as geometrically do they encircle the tiny home.

The June Rise Ends a Suit

By FREDERICK HART.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The little river that divided the Montgomery property from the Trenholm estate was a peaceful enough stream to all appearances; it wound lazily through the flat land of the valley, apparently taking always the longest, laziest course to get where it was going and not very particular as to when it got there. But the stream, innocent enough to all appearances, could make trouble when it chose. Once it did choose, during a late spring following a hard winter. On this occasion, swollen by the melted snows from the surrounding hills, it rose in its might and carved out a new channel for itself, making a straight cut where formerly it had made a wide bend.

There was no loss of life entailed in this whim of the river's; but it caused much trouble for the two families who lived on opposite sides of it. The title deeds to the land gave the boundaries as the river—no more, no less; and the new channel added 20 acres of land to the Montgomery estate and subtracted an equal number from the Trenholm holding—good farming land, too, enriched by the deposit from the stream.

The Trenholms went to law about it; the Montgomerys defended their newly acquired estate with vigor; and, as is the way of lawsuits, the case dragged on and on, arriving at no particular conclusion except to cause much bad blood where there was but little before and to make enemies out of former friends.

Margaret Trenholm, blonde, pretty and just turned twenty, came in for her share of the family feud. Her father, hard and stern ever, instilled or tried to instill into her mind his animosity for his neighbors; and it is likely that he would have succeeded had not fate taken a hand and decreed that one day when Margaret was riding her favorite horse near the boundaries of her estate she should meet young Davis Montgomery, just home from the college where he was studying law. The two strangers greeted each other as strangers do who are obviously bound by the fraternity of horsemen and passed on their ways; but fate was indefatigable.

Three more meetings cemented their friendship before either found out who the other was. When the names were disclosed it was too late. Those two young people had progressed past the point where inherited differences of opinion have any weight. If they had not fallen in love at first sight they had at least accomplished that desirable thing at third or fourth sight, and that amounts to much the same thing. They did not dare to broach the matter to their respective families, but they met occasionally, and each meeting cemented the bond of affection more firmly.

Thus it came about that one showery day in early June Davis Montgomery received a note with his morning mail which he read in private and which gave him apparently a great deal of satisfaction. After breakfast he announced to his father that he was going to take a turn down by the river to look at the banks. The floods of spring were still on, there was a report of high water from up the valley and he wanted to assure himself that all was well in the lower fields. His father seemed a bit surprised at his son's determination to get a wetting, but made no objection.

Down to the river bank rode young Davis Montgomery, and in a moment there came to his opposite bank a vision in a riding outfit—a vision not less lovely to his eyes because she was soaked with the rain. Neither of the young people, bred as they were to the outdoors, minded a wetting when it was a question of seeing each other. Margaret waved gayly to him and he returned the signal. Then he glanced at the river.

It was very different from the usual placid stream. Bank high it rolled a sullen brown flood, with here and there a piece of driftwood. The June rise was on indeed, and the river had risen in its might.

"Davis!" Margaret called to him. "Good morning, dear!"

Davis Montgomery forgot about the June rise and concentrated his thoughts on the fact that across that river was waiting the girl he loved. "Good morning, darling!" he called in return. Margaret, the better to speak to him, urged her horse to the edge of the bank where it overhung the stream. "Be careful!" shouted Davis. "The bank's undercut there!"

But his warning came too late. The bank, dug under by the ceaseless worrying of the river, crumbled and gave way under the weight of the girl and horse. In an instant Margaret was struggling in the swift stream, clinging to the bridle of her frightened mount; but in another instant Davis had leaped his horse into the stream and the two of them were making the best time possible out to where the brown head of Margaret could be seen beside the black head of her horse.

The struggle was brief but violent. Davis' Dandy was used to the water and kept his head magnificently. After what seemed ages of battle, but which really took only a few moments, Davis and Dandy succeeded in dragging the almost unconscious girl up a fortunately shelving bank, safe on dry land. Fifty yards further downstream they could see Margaret's horse, which she had abandoned in the effort to save her own life, struggling ashore, frightened but safe.

"Oh! I'm so glad!" were Margaret's first words. "Poor Black Beauty! If he had drowned I couldn't ever have forgiven myself."

"Thank goodness he's safe!" breathed Davis. "And thank the Lord that you're all right," he added in an unguarded tone.

Margaret heard his voice, tense with anxiety, and saw the look in his eyes; and in another moment she was in his arms, laughing and crying at once, glad after the tension of her escape to be able to lean on some one whom she loved.

Then suddenly the thought of her stern father and Davis' equally stern parent obtruded.

"Oh, Davis, dearest, why can't our families be friends? If only that stupid lawsuit could be settled we—we could get married and everything would be all right; but my daddy won't give in, and yours won't either, so—so—" Tears choked her.

But Davis seemed unconscious of her grief. "Look! Look! The river!" he shouted.

Margaret looked as directed. Before her eyes she saw the water gnawing at the thin bank that divided it from the old channel. The June rise had done its work. Even as the two watched the earth gave way, there was a great roar and a tumbling of foamy brown water, and the river, so long diverted, had found its original course again. The new channel lay muddy but empty before them, and the lawsuit that had so long divided the houses of Montgomery and Trenholm was settled out of court.

It was two very happy young people who went up to the Trenholm house an hour later.

"You see," said Margaret to Davis, "we have to tell them that the river has brought the families together again—and that we are going to tie the knot so tight that it can't ever come untied!"

GIGANTIC YEWS IN ENGLAND

That Some Trees in That Country Attain a Record Growth, Is Fact Not Generally Known.

England's proud old parks and forests hold many a storied tree, but most people would not suppose that certain trees, for height, attain their maximum growth in the island country. Our redwood skyscrapers stand alone, but could our ashes compete with England?

Prof. Augustine Henry, in an article in London Country Life, says that of the continent of Europe, at least, there do not appear to be any ash trees as tall as those in the old heronry at Cobham hall, Kent, some of which are 150 feet high. The tallest hornbean on record anywhere grew near West Wycombe, and measured 100 feet while the field maple, usually small attains in Kent and Sussex a height of 75 feet. In England and Scotland the wild cherry grows to an enormous size

FATIMA WAS PERFECT WOMAN

But, According to This, She Should Have Lived to See Her Name on the Billboards.

Fatima lived in the Seventh century, but by all rhyme and reason should have lived in the present day, when she could see her name on the billboards and all the cigar store windows, remarks a writer in the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune. Fatima was the perfect woman of her time. Married to a nobleman, one of the great goons of Egypt, she bore three sons whose first names all started with Ali. Fatima was beautiful to look upon and tried during her time to grab all the best looking hoofers in and about Mecca—which, like Fatima, is celebrated in cigarette lore.

Fatima was a daughter of Mohammed, who wrote a number of oriental spectacles and staged several others at the Arabian Hippodrome, but who was shocked to death after seeing an American version.

Fatima shook her first husband and started in to win Bluebeard, not that the noted butcher appealed to her, but she was curious to know what happened to so many women in Bluey's bailiwick.

Fatima was the symbol of feminine curiosity—in that, every time she heard of any local scandal, she said: "I'll look into that."

Fatima lived for 26 years, which was a long, long time when one considers the period in which she thrived—if she did thrive—and the very fact that she lasted over the honeymoon period with Bluebeard is greatly in her favor.

She was one of the first electricians of her day, being associated intimately with "Aladdin's lamp"—and lived to see her husband "lit up" several times during the darkest spells.

FIRST TO ILLUSTRATE BOOK

Roman Writer Is Credited With Innovation, Many Years Before the Coming of Christ.

Book illustrations are so common nowadays, and the various processes of reproducing pictures in print so highly developed, that it seems almost strange to contemplate the fact that there was a time when the first illustrated book created a veritable sensation.

The event occurred in the year 70 B. C. Varro, a rather mediocre writer of ancient Rome, had been struggling for recognition for a good many years when he suddenly conceived the idea of preparing a volume containing the biographies of 700 of his most famous fellow-citizen.

History is silent on the rather interesting question whether Varro charged them for his services or not, but it is loud in his praise as the first writer who conceived the idea of illustrating his work with portraits.

They were crudely drawn, and as to whether they were good likenesses or not, will always remain an open question. But they were illustrations all the same, and after that the custom of embellishing historical works with drawings became a fad among the writers of those days.

Jenny Lind in 1851.

Anne Hollingsworth Wharton writes in her book, "In Old Pennsylvania Towns," that while visiting in Hollidaysburg friends told her of other and more romantic associations, still recalled by old inhabitants who remembered Jenny Lind's visit to Blair county in 1851. Mr. Snyder related an incident connected with the Swedish singer's stay at the Mountain house, which was situated at a railroad junction near Hollidaysburg.

While at this hotel the singer engaged a carriage to take her up the mountain side and on reaching a place from which there was an extended view of the distant mountains, the valley and the Juniata flowing through it, she was so impressed by beauty of the scene that she greeted it with an outburst of song so exquisite, said the narrator, that the birds, her only hearers except the coachman, must have felt that a rival of their own kind had joined them. The view of the hill and valley may have reminded the Swedish nightingale of some scene in her own land, as the song with which she broke in on the stillness of the mountain side was "Home, Sweet Home."

DISAPPEARS IN THE EARTH

Mystery of "Vanishing River" in Mexico Has Long Been a Puzzle to Scientists.

One of the most remarkable rivers in the world flows through the northern part of Mexico. It borders the great Mexican desert and to reach it one need travel only one day's journey on horseback from the Rio Grande, which marks the southern boundary of the United States in that region. The extraordinary river in question has its source in the hills bordering the desert. It flows southward for some twenty miles as smoothly as any well-behaved river, but, suddenly, as it flows between high bluffs, it becomes whirling rapids—rapids so strong and so dangerous that no man has ever been brave enough to attempt to cross the rushing waters.

One follows the rapids, as he walks along the bluff on either side, for about two miles, and then that river vanishes utterly. Hence the name Vanishing river. It disappears suddenly, mysteriously, completely, into the earth itself, and not into a cave, as one would suppose. Scientists have tried in vain to ascertain where that river goes; all that they have yet announced as the result of their explorations is that the river seems to drop sheer into the earth, as over the brink of a bottomless abyss, and that this Vanishing river is the most amazing body of water known to geographers.

THRESHING MADE A PASTIME

Italian Families Beat Wheat From Straw in Rhythm, and Seem to Enjoy the Work.

Gasparino Dante got up early Sunday morning, and before the sun was very high his day's work was well started on his farm near Capua, Italy. The two daughters—one eighteen and the other fifteen—started (and finished) the day with the men. The younger children were too small to be of any help, although the boy of ten scattered wheat over the stone threshing floor so that it would be ready when the older members of the family had finished with breakfast—bread and cheese and coffee, for Dante can afford coffee in the morning. He owns thirty acres.

When threshing started, the father paired with the oldest girl on the side of the floor; the other couple stood side by side opposite. The four flails were poised high in the air an instant and then at a shout from the farmer one pair descended and as they were lifted the couple opposite struck.

The four beat the grain, keeping perfect time and pausing only while the boy raked the straw into a pile at one side of the floor and swept the kernels of wheat into another heap, and threw down a fresh supply.

Then, with a shouted signal that seemed to welcome the new onslaught the rhythm of the thumping started again. The manner of the threshers was more like that of couples dancing an old-fashioned quadrille than that of harvest toilers under the blistering, blinding midsummer sun of southern Italy.

Heredity's Deadly Work.

"Strange case of heredity in that family!"

"How come?"

"One of the boys has a golden tenor voice, one is in the prize ring and has a tin ear, one is a press agent with all the brass in the world, one is a silver tongued orator, one an aluminum ware canvasser, one a steel puddler, one a copper—"

"Well, where does the heredity come in?"

"Why, their father was one of those mercurial men who ruled their sons with an iron hand."—Retail Ledger Philadelphia.

Professional Decision.

"You don't take any interest in the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy?"

"No," replied Mr. Stormington Barnes. "Whoever wrote the plays Shakespeare's got the reputation, and you couldn't interest the people by putting another man's name on the billboards."

Forty young married people sat down to a bountiful banquet at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, Tuesday night. The basement was very beautifully decorated in Christmas style. The pastor closed the speaking with a brief word and urged the signing up of all who wished to be charter members of the class which starts Sunday, December 4th. Thirty people signed up as charter members. Young women from Miss Parrett's class served the dinner. "Auld Lang Syne" sung at 9:30 o'clock closed the social hour. ## The Old Folks' Christmas

By Christopher Grant Hazard

THE Old Folks decided that it was time for them to be young again. So, they set up a Christmas tree in a corner of the big dining room.

Santa Claus came bustling in and began to make things pleasant. Tied to his belt there was an alarm clock. Its bell was ringing like everything. This was to wake the Old Folks up.

First, he called the roll, to see if they were all up and awake. Then, he began to pick the presents off the tree.

Soon the room was gay with dolls, horns and jumping jacks.

A doll was riding in her carriage, squeaking and rising up every few feet as she rode along.

There was a talking doll, too. She sang and talked when they pushed the buttons on her dress.

There were hot dolls for cold nights and cups and balls for the Old Folks to play with when they could not sleep.

The Old Folks all played with their presents. They blew on their horns, and amused themselves with the jumping-jacks, and sent the moving toys running about the room all at once.

But, after all, the Old Folks thought it wasn't so very much fun because there were no real children there. So they sent out to see if they could find some.

They found Lucy, Peter, Billy, Mary, Sally, Hilda, Ruth, and some other children, who all came to see the Old Folks' Christmas tree.

Lucy told the Old Folks the story about her dog Trump.

Trump was a tramp dog, but he could do some tricks. He loved to be dressed up in a blanket, with a belt. Then, with a beribboned straw hat on his head, he would walk across the room upon his hind legs.

After Lucy came Peter.

Peter said that he did not know any stories, but once he carried the flag for the big boys' baseball team, and they let him go in to see the baseball game, free.

Then Billy told a story.

He said that once he sat up all night, waiting for Santa Claus to come and fill his stocking. That is, he tried to sit up all night; but Santa Claus didn't come and so he fell asleep in the dark. The next day the doctor came to see him. The doctor told him he had had "stockingitis."

Billy said, too, that when he woke up in the early morning and found that Santa Claus had forgotten to fill his stocking, he was going to throw himself on the floor and pound his heels on it and holler. But then he happened to remember how ugly his brother Harry looked when he did that. So Billy thought he wouldn't; and he didn't.

Mary told about the songs she sang to her doll.

LIFE'S FINEST GAME

Have you ever helped another?
Ever earned a grateful smile?
Ever asked a weary brother
In to ride with you a mile?
Have you ever given freely
Of your riches and your worth?
If you haven't, then you've really
Missed the greatest joy on earth.

Has a thrill of pride possessed you?
Have you felt your pulses run
As a weaker brother blessed you
For some good that you had done?
Have you seen eyes start to glisten
That were sad before you came?
If you haven't, stop and listen,
You have missed life's finest game.

PIG IRON'S BASIC PRODUCTS

Metal Sold in Three Forms—Cast, Wrought and Steel—One of Most Valuable Minerals.

Iron is the most valuable metal in the world to man, because it is of more use in more ways.

It has been known to men from earliest times. Savages smelted it. It is generally found compounded with other substances such as carbon. These other substances have to be burned out in order to have pure iron.

Iron is sold in three forms—cast iron, wrought iron, and steel. Cast iron is brittle and hard, like the lid on the kitchen range. Wrought iron can be hammered out flat or made into wire or welded. It is quite soft. Steel is also capable of being hammered out flat and welded. Its peculiar property is that when tempered it becomes very hard—so hard that a sharp edge can be put on it—so hard that it will, when edged, cut wrought iron.

Iron which has been melted and poured into a mold in some form desired for use, such as part of a stove, is called cast iron. Iron which is cast roughly from the smelted ore in order to be used to make cast iron, wrought iron or steel is called pig iron.

Puddling is the name of the process by which pig iron is made into wrought iron. It is done in a furnace in which the carbon is burned from the pig iron.

Pig iron contains the most carbon, then comes steel and then wrought iron.

Steel can be made directly from pig iron by what is known as the Bessemer and open-hearth processes. Formerly it was made from wrought iron.

CITES EARTH'S 14 MOVEMENTS

Flammarion, French Astronomer, Enumerates Various Activities of Globe During Its Travels.

The fact that our earth in its voyage through space has no fewer than fourteen distinct movements has been pointed out by the French astronomer and scientist, Camille Flammarion, according to an article in the Paris Temps. These are as follows:

"Daily rotation, annual revolution, fluctuation or rocking due to the precession of the equinoxes in a period of 26,765 years, monthly movement of the earth around the center of gravity of the earth-moon couple; nutation caused by the attraction of the moon every eighteen and a half years; variation, coming once every century, of the obliquity of the ecliptic; variations every century of the eccentricity of the terrestrial orbit; displacement of the line of apses every 21,000 years; disturbances caused by the constantly changing attraction of the planets; displacement of the center of gravity of the solar system around which the earth travels annually, this center being determined by the variable positions of the planets; perpetual variation of latitudes; daily tides of the continental soil; displacement of the whole Milky Way, of which our sun is one star, toward the constellation of Capricorn, at the formidable speed of 375 miles per second, or 1,250,000 miles per hour."

Most Men Have Defects.

If the man who measures you for your next suit calls out "N. F. R. B." to the assistant who jots down the measurements, take care! It is a warning that your physique is not all that it should be—in fact a great deal less. It stands for "neck forward, round back."

"It's the commonest fault in the physique of our customers," explained a tailor. "Most men have flat chest and round back. The army straightened some of them up for a while but they've begun slumping back again.

About one man in ten has bow legs, the bow running from 1½ to 4 inches. Practically every man's shoulders are uneven—one higher than the other. But that's so common that you wouldn't call it a defect.

"Here's another thing I've noticed. All the athletes, the professional strong men, have sloping shoulders. The fellow with the straight, heavy shoulders whom you'd take for an athlete usually isn't."—Milwaukee Journal.

Vaccinating Sugar Cane.

The vaccination or inoculation of plants in the bitterly waged fight against their diseases will appeal as a novel idea to many who have always thought of the method in connection with the prevention of human and animal maladies only. A measure of success has attended its use by the office of foreign seed and plant introduction, Washington, D. C., reports Popular Mechanics, in the evolution of a variety of sugar cane which will be immune to the commoner forms of disease peculiar to the plant, and especially the so-called mosaic disease, which has recently made its appearance on the sugar plantations. Seedlings from the inoculated specimens will be tested for immunity, and if the experiment is the success it is hoped it will be it is thought that a practically disease-proof variety of plant will be evolved.

WHAT VOLCANOES THROW UP

Water, Dust, Mud, Pumice, Glass and Granite Among Products of the Rumblers.

A volcano—let us say Stromboli, which very frequently makes a lot of trouble—ejects materials of various kinds.

One of these is water. It is the last thing we should expect a burning mountain to produce, but, as a matter of fact, volcanoes vomit enormous quantities of water, formed by the cooling and consequent condensation of gases rising through the vent pipe.

Volcanic dust, thrown high into the air during an eruption, is so finely divided that much of it will float in the upper levels of the atmosphere for years. Its particles seem mostly to be minute bubbles, hollow inside.

Together with water, volcanoes emit vast quantities of mud, which, hardening into rock, form what is called "tuff"—a friable material which in parts of our own West covers great areas to a depth of thousands of feet.

A familiar volcanic product is pumice, which is so porous, and therefore so light in weight, that it will float on water. Another is obsidian, or "volcanic glass," a substance of the same chemical composition as pumice, but extremely hard, being of high density.

Typical of the "eruptive" rocks, representing material thrown up from the depths, is granite. Such rocks are practically impervious to water, whereas the sedimentary rocks—sandstones, limestones and shales—are sufficiently porous to allow water to percolate through them. It is these sedimentary rocks that contain the so-called "pools" of petroleum usually with water underlying the oil.

GINKGO TREE IS FROM JAPAN

Regarded by Park Commissioners Everywhere as One of the Most Satisfactory Shade-Makers.

One of the exports from Japan which has met universal favor and unqualified approval in Europe and America is the Ginkgo tree. You will see hardly a public park on the continent or in England without it, and, as for American cities, "Jinkgo" is one of the park commissioners' standbys. Washington, District of Columbia, has adopted it as its "official street tree"—whatever that means. Because it is so hardy under city conditions—that explains its popularity, in part. It is also a large and tall tree, peerless for shade.

Its name has proved almost impregnable to western tongues. Some one has said that to get two tree experts who will agree on the spelling, "you would have to go to Japan—and there they dodge the issue and draw a picture." Ginkgo, gingko, jinkgo, ginko, jinka—are a few occidental variations of the puzzle. Many tactful persons have adopted "Maidenhair Tree," as a way out—it's long-petioled leaves are quite the shape of the so-called maidenhair fern of American woods. Although classified botanically among the "evergreens" or "conifers," it is deciduous, and its cone is not a cone at all, but a fruity covered seed.

Cottage or Mansion, the Oak Floors are the Same

Oak floors are the Hall Mark of quality in any home—they testify to good taste and good judgment and sound construction.

Oak is the aristocratic of flooring woods. It is found in well-built homes of the most modest character, as well as the stateliest mansions.

Oak floors are the least expensive because they never wear out in ordinary service. They harmonize with any scheme of interior decoration and furnishing, and they have "beauty that is more than skin deep."

New oak floors, easily laid on top of old floors, are a "permanent improvement" in the fullest sense of the term; they certainly are "permanent" and they surely are a wonderful improvement.

The Old Folks Christmas

She said that the song that her doll liked the best was:

The little dog went to the market town,
With one foot up, and one foot down;
But when he came to a muddy place
He jumped cla-a-a-an over!

Mary said that she always jumped her doll at the "jump" part.

Sally thought that it was a long time since she had known a story, "most as long as the night before Christmas," but she did remember a ride she once had on a little donkey.

She said they had to send the old donkey on ahead to make the little donkey hurry.

Then she remembered about the cats at her grandma's house. There was a big cat for the big mice, and a little cat for the little mice.

Hilda told a story about a little blind boy she once saw.

When she said her evening prayer that night, her mother said to her: "What are you going to say, in your prayer tonight, about that poor little blind boy you saw to-day?"

So Hilda asked God about him.

The very next day she took the little blind boy a big orange.

It was now Ruth's turn.

"Once I asked a little girl if that was her sister," said Ruth. "The little girl said: 'I ain't a sister. It's a baby.'"

One of the other boys now had a story to tell.

"Once I saw a cyclone come around the corner of a street," he said. "A man had a tent there with a lot of dolls in it. The man wanted to sell the dolls, but the cyclone took the tent right up into the sky, with all the dolls in it.

"Another man asked him: 'What are you making such a fuss about? Weren't your dolls for sale?' and everybody laughed except the doll man."

The Old Folks were having such a good time listening to the stories that they thought the children ought to have a good time, too. So they took all their presents that had come off the tree and gave them to the little folks who had come in.

Every boy and every girl had a toy and a box of candy—Lucy, Peter, Billy, Mary, Sally, Hilda, and the others.

Then, all the young Old Folks and all the children marched around the dining room singing.

They sang "Merry, Merry Christmas," and so the fun ended.

But I guess it didn't quite end then, either. For, as the young Young Folks went out of the door and down the street, the young Old Folks could hear them laughing, long after they turned the corner.

Besides, the young Old Folks have been talking about their "Old Folks' Christmas" ever since.

Every Boy and Every Girl Had a Toy.

Rev. J. N. Johnston, pastor of Hilltop Church of Christ, who's new building was dedicated last Sunday.

Social Stunts

One of the most pleasant meetings of the Bay View Literary Club was held Monday evening at the home of Mrs. D. B. Ulrey, 56 S. Warren Ave. Mrs. Chas. Stephenson had charge of the program for the afternoon. The use of fairy tales being her subject, telling of the origin of fairy tales and the use of them in the different countrys. Mrs. C. Moore gave a very interesting paper on the Grimm brothers Grimm's Fairy Tales, and Mrs. McLuskey told a splendid fairy story. "Atomized" coal—different from merely "powdered" coal because very minutely divided—is a new product that is finding important uses.

It is used for making a high-grade paint and also as a substitute for lampblack in the manufacture of ink. Another valuable employment for it is in "facing" foundry molds, to give the surfaces a smooth finish in preparation for castings.

AGE OF CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE

Obelisk in New York Park Was Erected in Egypt Before the Birth of Moses.

Cleopatra's Needle, which stands in Central park, New York city, was given to the United States by Egypt and was transported here at the expense of the late W. H. Vanderbilt. It was erected in 1881. The crabs it stands upon are replicas of the originals, which are in the Metropolitan museum. In the museum, too, a model is to be seen showing how the obelisk was lowered and raised into position. It is sixty-seven feet high and weighs 180 tons.

Gazing at it, it is hard to realize that when it was erected Moses had not been born, that not one being in Europe could read or write, indeed that Greece, Rome, England had never even been heard of, remarks the Detroit News.

When Thothmes III, erected this obelisk, about 1500 B. C., to commemorate his victories over the enemies of Egypt, his country was the richest and most powerful in the world, the great center of trade and the leader in letters and arts. The last independent ruler of Egypt, Cleopatra, had the obelisk transferred from Heliopolis, the old capital, to Alexandria, thereby giving it its present name.

With the fall of ancient civilizations the old buildings of Egypt decayed and everything about that country was forgotten. Finally, at the instigation of Napoleon, scientists undertook to solve these secrets and aroused interest in that long-forgotten country.

USED ANTS TO FIGHT PESTS

Southern Arabs Employed the Method 150 Years Ago in Culture of the Date Palm.

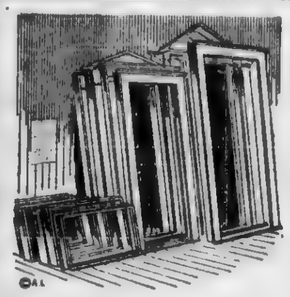
Control of destructive insects by the introduction of their natural enemies has become an important technique during the last generation, writes Paul Popence in Science. But if competent observers are to be trusted, the southern Arabs employed the same method more than 150 years ago in the culture of the date palm.

In his "Relation d'un Voyage dans l'Yemen" (Paris, 1880, page 155), P. E. Botta says:



"I was able to verify the singular fact previously observed by Forskal, that the date palms in Yemen are attacked by a species of ant which would cause them to perish if each year the growers did not bring from the mountains and fasten in the tops of the palms branches of a tree that I did not recognize, which contains the nests of another species of ant which destroys that of the date palm."

P. Forskal was the naturalist of C. Niebuhr's expedition; his work was published posthumously in 1775. I have not seen his account to which Botta refers.

It would be interesting to know whether the history of economic entomology furnishes any earlier record of the "biological method" of pest control.

Joe Hodges says: "Women's just like elephants. I like to look at them, but I'd hate to own one."

Ever try looking for the guys that are worse off than you are? There's a lot of 'em.

FESTIVITIES OF OLD TIMES

Lord of Misrule Was Important Functionary at Yuletide Celebrations of the Long Ago.

THE Lord of Misrule was an important functionary at the Christmas festivities of these long-ago times. An account of this important personage has been preserved by the historian and antiquary, John Stow, who lived during the reign of Queen Elisabeth and during the first year of the reign of King Charles I, and was, therefore, a contemporary of Shakespeare.

"In the feast of Christmas," writes Stow, "there was in the king's house, wherever he lodged, a Lord of Misrule or Master of Merry Deports, and the like had ye in the house of every nobleman of honor or good worship, were he spiritual or temporal. The mayor of London, and either of the sheriffs, had their several Lords of Misrule."

At Cambridge university the Lord of Misrule was a master of art, elected to superintend the representation of Latin plays by the students, besides taking charge of their games and diversions during the Christmas season. A similar Master of Revels was chosen at Oxford.

In the Inns of Courts in London, where the barristers had their offices and belongings, a Lord of Misrule reigned with great splendor, "being surrounded with all the parade and ceremony of royalty, his guard of honor, and even his two chaplins who preached before him in the Temple church."

On the Twelfth day he abdicated his sovereignty, and we are informed that in the year 1635, this mock-representative of royalty expended in the exercise of his office about two thousand pounds from his own purse, and at the conclusion of his reign was knighted by King Charles I at Whitehall.

Saving the Leftovers.

Instead of always frying up any left-over potatoes, why not use them for hot tea scones? They only take a few minutes to make. To half a pound of cold potatoes add two ounces of flour and a teaspoonful each of salt and baking powder. Knead them all together, then add just enough milk—sour milk if you like—to make a stiff dough. Roll out and cut into either squares or rounds with a pastry cutter or tumbler and bake on a tin in a quick oven.

To Sweeten Musty Teapot.

To sweeten a metal or enamel teapot which has become musty, fill it with boiling water and drop in a red-hot cinder, close the lid and leave for a short time. Then rinse out with clean water.

YOUR HOUSE

Be true to yourself, at the start young man.
Be true to yourself and God;
'Ere you build your house, mark well the spot;
Test all the ground and build you not,
On the sand or the shaking sod.

Dig, dig the foundation deep, young man;
Plant firmly the outer wall;
Let the props be strong, and the roof be high;
With an open turret towards the sky;
Through which heaven's dews may fall.

Let this be the room of the soul, young man.
When shadows shall herald care;
A chamber with never a roof or thatch,
To hinder the light—or door or latch,
To shut in the spirit's prayer.

Build slow and sure—'tis for life, young man;
A life that shall outlive the breath;
For who shall gainsay the Holy Word;
"Their works do follow them" sayeth the Lord;
There—in there is no death.

Build deep, and broad, and high, young man;
As the needful case demands;
Let your title deeds be clear and bright,
'Till you enter your claim to the Lord of light;
For the house not made with hands.
Author unknown.

Pretty soon we'll be wanting summer to play an encore.

Old Father Hubbard, went to the cupboard
To get himself a drink,
But when he got there the cupboard was bare,
And he had to go to the sink.

WON'T DIE AND LEAVE WORK

Japanese Mortality Rate Lower in Silkworm Season, It is Said, for Remarkable Reason.

There are many reasons for death. But it is a remarkable thing that during the silkworm rearing time in the silk districts, even the sickest people, contrary to all expectation, do not die. The rate of death among old people and invalids in the silk regions during the busiest season is very low indeed.

What is the reason? Well, most of these people unconsciously think, "Well, if I die now, everything will be very much upset because I do not finish my work, and if I die, I too will be very much upset in the other world because no one here will have time to give me a good funeral and to see that I am properly and comfortably buried. So I guess I had better live just a bit longer." And remarkable to relate they do go on living. The will to live makes them bear the ills of living and they do not die during the growing season.

But after the transfer of the matured silkworms to the cocoon beds, for ten days there are people dying everywhere. That is strange, too. But really it is because the spirit no longer holds them up. The excitement is over and with rest comes death; the time of anxiety is over and the strain is loosened and with the loosening comes the end of life.

In the silk regions there are not many deaths in either the extremely hot or the extremely cold times. But just after the silkworms are transferred to the cocoon beds, after the strenuous days of rearing them from the egg are over, then they die like flies in winter. It is all a matter of spirit, or as some would call it, "mind."—Japan Advertiser.

HEN FAITHFULLY DID DUTY

Clever Woman's Confidence in Her Pet "Biddy" Proved to Be Abundantly Justified.

There was an old woman who lived—not in a shoe but on a farm in New Hampshire. She made a contract to deliver two dozen fresh eggs to an anaemic family from New York who were building up on milk and eggs after a wearing season, and these eggs were to be delivered at a certain hour daily. Although she had to go by buckboard she always fulfilled her contract to the last egg.

But one day as the old woman was putting on her "bunalt" preparatory to start an accident broke one of the twenty-four fresh eggs and there was no time to wait for the laying of another. What was she to do? Fail to keep her appointment or deliver the twenty-three eggs with an excuse?

This clever old woman did neither of these things. She snatched up a squawking hen which had a record as a good layer, crammed it into a coop and started out. On the trip the needed fresh egg arrived, and it was added to the others and made up the quota.

When the customer was counting the eggs she noticed the warm one and asked the reason. The old woman laughed and told the story of how her favorite dependable hen had almost literally laid an egg in her hand. The story has been told over and ever since then in ever-widening areas until with the return home of the New York family, no longer anaemic, it has reached the metropolis.—New York Herald.

Heard in Every Home.

"Why on earth you will persist in coming into the house with all that dirt on your feet beats me. I never saw such a man."

"Now you leave me a little money before you go downtown. How do you expect me to pay the gas bill and vegetable man with nothing to pay with?"

"But I just gave you a dollar last Thursday to shop on. Do you mean to tell me you've gone and spent a whole dollar so soon?"

"It seems to me you might hose off the porch once in a while when you are hanging around doing nothing."

"Now, I don't want to see you winking at the hired girl again, or I'll pack right up and go straight home to mamma."

"My land! Take those big feet of yours off that sofa cushion right this minute. You are the limit!"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Freaks of Sound.

If, when the air is still, you stand near a high wall and speak a word loudly, it will come back to you as if repeated by an invisible person. It is, of course, an echo. Parallel walls separated by a few hundred feet, as a canyon, may so reflect a sound as to cause it to be distinctly heard again and again in a long-undying series of repetitions. If the reflecting walls are irregular, the repetitions, instead of being distinct to the ear, will be mere jumbled and unintelligible reverberations. This is noticeable in certain caverns.

Fortified.

"Are you going to polish up your French in order to engage in diplomatic conversations?"

"It might be valuable," said Senator Sorghum. "A man speaking in a foreign tongue naturally commands forbearance and gets lots of chances to correct himself. But I guess I've had enough practice in filibustering to make myself sufficiently misunderstood without going outside the English language."

The Coming of the Child

By

Mary Graham Bonner

"AND," Gregory Morse added, "as I've always said, I think people should be honest with each other before marriage. I don't approve of divorce—curious thing to be speaking of on the very evening I'm asking you to marry me, but it has a bearing on the subject. No," he emphasized, "I don't approve of divorce. Of course there are very extenuating circumstances at times. But I think most of them could be avoided if people talked openly and candidly before they were married."

He told her then that he cared for children, that they would mean a great deal to him.

She felt herself growing more and more tense. The whole of her ached for him. Yes, she had waited all her life for him, never mistaking in any of the others, the substitute for the real.

"I feel as you do," she said softly. "I love children!"

And she spoke the truth. But yet a truth that was only half a truth.

They were married, in the little village church on Christmas Eve and when later the carols pealed forth they felt as though even the carols were for their happiness alone!

They had been married several years. Closer and closer had they grown together. How glad she was she had waited until she was sure she loved. She had had so many proposals, and there were girls who had had so few. She had often thought of he girl to whom the simplest of pleasures had come as a complete and magnificent joy. This girl had had no attentions, her life had been almost maniless. At last came a man into her life, very slowly, very unemotionally, but each slow step along the way was one which thrilled her and which mounted up to huge and great proportions. It had to be a great deal to rouse Marjorie but Gregory had roused her—fully.

She had always kept her fresh charm and her appeal though she had left youth behind Her skin was smooth, her color good, her eyes dark and lustrous and her hair had no traces of gray.

But during this time no children had come to them. Gregory now didn't seem to care whether they came or not. He was quite content with her.

"People change their ideas after they marry if they really love the woman they marry," he used to tell her. "Before they have theories. Now if children came, all well and good. But I couldn't be any happier than I am now."

She knew he spoke the truth. She knew it. He was even jealous of her eagerness for children. Was this what it meant to marry, he some times asked himself. Did people forget about each other and sink their hopes and aspirations and ambitions and emotions and dreams into the coming of another generation when they had sworn and believed before God and man that they would only love each other. Did they love each other so little? Did they care only for the sake of the family? It couldn't be.

"I Feel as You Do."

That was too cold a belief.

Another year passed and they began growing apart. Marjorie had become restless, unhappy. Was it because of children? Gregory asked himself Couldn't she have been happy with him? Was his marriage to be a disillusion?

But one evening she came to him.

"Gregory," she said, "I have so much to tell you. Let me begin from the beginning. I've been going to tell you this so many times.

"When I married you I lied to you. Now don't interrupt me, dear. Yes, I lied about my age. I loved you. I was afraid if I told you that perhaps I was too old to have children that you wouldn't—marry me—that I would lose you. And I couldn't lose you. Don't you see it was because I loved you so that I lied to you?" she cried. "I loved you so," she repeated.

"My darling, I'm so relieved," he said. "All I care about is that you love me."

"I know that," she said him. "But the heritage of my life has been punishing me. Even though I know

A woman of any age knows that a certain amount of self-satisfaction has been necessary to keep the race going, and that the self-satisfied type that appreciates itself most highly has been the most successful type. The trait has been very valuable to the race, at any rate in the rough-and-tumble conditions through which men have lived and struggled in evolving from the days of Pithecanthropus.

Women have done their bit in simulating this quality of conceit and self-satisfaction because they like successful men and have married them when they had the chance—which is the same thing as saying that they have married conceited men and bred conceited boys, whose conceit they fostered by praise.

MANY THINGS USED AS MONEY

Cattle, Shells and Whales' Teeth Among a Few That Are Reckoned as Currency.

When hunting was the chief occupation of man the skins of animals were the earliest means of currency, and this medium of exchange is still used by the North American Indians.

Leather money was the natural successor to skins, and was used freely in Rome and Carthage, as well as being circulated in Russia as late as the reign of Peter the Great.

As civilization advanced sheep and cattle came to be regarded as the most negotiable form of wealth, and many of our words in common use are historic reminders of the fact.

For example, "pecuniary" reminds us of the Latin "pecunia," meaning money, and "pecus," signifying cattle; whereas the word "fee," a sum of money paid as wages, is derived from the Saxon "feoh," a word used to express both cattle and money.

By an old German code of laws sheep and cattle were counted by the head, and were called "capitale," showing the source of our commercial word, "capital," for wealth, the law term "chattel" (in "goods and chattels"), for effects, and our common name for oxen—"cattle."

At the present time oxen form the principal wealth and circulating medium among the Zulus and Kaffirs.

CONCEIT A MASCULINE TRAIT

Woman Writer So Asserts, and Says It Usually Crops Out After His Marriage.

All feminine creatures, from the cradle to the grave, proceed on the basis that all men are conceited. This is perhaps particularly true of the man who is no longer lover, but husband. As lover he had a wide streak of humility in his composition; a husband mostly regards humility as a waste product, writes a Woman of Forty in Harper's.

More than once I have seen some dull woman flattering my husband, and have had him tell me afterward what a fine, keen, warm-hearted little person she is. I have yet to meet the man who fails to feel that the woman who admires him has something sound and right about her. More than once I have flattered a man just to see him expand.

Indeed, it is a stupid or inexperienced woman who has not done this, and usually because she wanted to get something out of him. In his dealing with a woman it is quite easy to sell a man a gold brick. Doubtless, the well-known law of compensation works here; if men get plenty of self-satisfaction out of their self-confidence, it is something for which they have to pay the piper.

Year Without a Summer.

The year 1816 was the year without a summer. In that year the sun spots were at a maximum.

Old records say that the opening months of this anomalous year—January and February—were mild, but March turned cold. April started out warm, but before it ended the fields in the northern United States were stiffened with frost and whitened with snow. The cold continued throughout May, ice forming an inch thick, and repeated plantings of seed being successively destroyed, until farmers gave up in despair. June gave no relief, ice continuing to be formed on the streams and ponds and snow to be sprinkled over the fields. "Almost every green thing was killed; fruit nearly all destroyed; snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, seven in Maine, three in the interior of New York and also in Massachusetts."

The Coming of the Child

you don't think now that children make any difference I know I cheated you, whom of all others I cared most for."

"Marjorie, Marjorie dear," he caressed her, "I am so relieved that I know now what has been worrying you. I was afraid you had ceased to love me."

"It was never that, it was never that," she said.

"You see, Marjorie," he went on, "if at first you had told me you were to have a child I would have been delighted—it would have seemed the conventional idea of the completion of married life which I had pictured in my mind. Afterward I realized that the most important of all was that I had you and loved you and that you loved me.

"Lately I've become very jealous of your desire for children because I though I didn't count so much. How dreadfully we've groped in the dark even though we have been so close together."

She was happy then as she hadn't been before, happy in the love that he now gave her, the love for which she had braved a lie.

And even as he held her close she thought of it—and life—so full of perplexing moral issues. Had she not lied to him would she have fulfilled their own happy destinies? Would they have not rather gone their separate ways, yet two more unhappy mortals whose lives were but a [illegible]?

Yet she had lied and in that lie she had cheated him, the one whom of all others she had cared most for she had cheated most completely. Perhaps he didn't care for children now. Perhaps he would never think of them again. Perhaps, oh perhaps, a hundred conjectures!

But clearly standing above the others were these two issues—she had lied to win him and because of that lie she had cheated and played false to the one she loved.

A lie is a vigorous parent, imbuing its offspring with its ever powerful blood of doubt and worry. Always, she felt, she would think from time to time that she had cheated him, and that in the deep recesses of her mind he would feel her love had been a very frail and weak thing.

Yet again and again reverted to her mind the knowledge that had it not been for that lie when she had spoken it Gregory and she would never have been happy.

And these doubts and worried thoughts were the heritage of a lie such as hers had been.

It seemed like a miracle. She had given up all hope. Still at times the lie she had told in the first place of all haunted her, because she felt she had cheated Gregory. He never referred to it. He seemed radiantly happy. But she had worried.

And then some time after she had told him, she knew. She was glad she had told him. She was glad that he knew her weaknesses and faults and all. Her happiness over the coming child was so much greater because she had told him.

"And it's to be an anniversary child."

The Christmas carols were pealing forth when a small boy opened his eyes upon the world so new to him.

"I'm sorry it's not a girl so we can call her Marjorie," Gregory smiled.

"I'm delighted it's a boy and that we can name him Gregory," Marjorie whispered.

"Merry Christmas," Gregory said, a little later. The clock just struck twelve.

"Merry Christmas," Marjorie answered.

And the small boy gave a shrill little cry.

"That's his way of saying 'Merry Christmas,'" Marjorie added.

"I'm delighted to have it explained to me," her husband chuckled.

Freshening Rolls.

Frequently muffins, gems, cornbread, brambread etc., are a part of the evening dinner and seldom are all eaten during the evening meal, some being left over. The question comes to the conscientious housewife, "How can I serve them again in their original freshness?" It can easily be done. Grease a piece of brown paper, using plenty of grease. Wrap in it the muffins, bread, etc. Place in hot oven for ten or fifteen minutes, unwrap, serve, and, if you did not know, you would think they were just baked.

No Special Time for Thought.

When is the best time to think, to have truth enter our minds? Thought along a particular line can best come when the mind is unwearied and unoccupied with other thought—the time of day has nothing to do with it.

The tired mind or the mind already active is not in condition to think. Often you have tried to read a book and been unable to follow the thought of the writer. Either your mind was tired or other vexing or more interesting thought held the ground.

Have the mind untired and undisturbed and you can think at one time as well as another.—Exchange.

Death of Mrs. Dr. Turner

Mrs. Sarah B. Turner was born at Vinton, Gallia County, Ohio, September 22nd, 1869. She was the daughter of Richard D. and Sarah H. Edwards and was one of a family of eight children, six of whom survive her. They are as follows: Mrs. E. W. Keck, of Westerville, Miss Hannah Edwards of Ervington; Mrs. Irving Tamblyn Miller, S. D.; R. C. Edwards, of Vinton; O. E. Edwards and W. D. Edwards of Columbus.

November 4th, 1888, she was united in marriage with Dr. Luther B. Turner and for thirty-three years she shared with him the labors and triumphs of conjugal life. Three children were born to this union—Annis O., Cyril Brown, and Lauren E., all residing at home. For a number of years they lived at Bidwell, Ohio, but about fifteen years ago they came to Columbus where they have resided ever since.

Mrs. Turner united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Ervington, Ohio, when fifteen years of age. For the past ten years she has been a member of the Glenwood Methodist Episcopal Church. She was also a member of the Robert T. Morris Chapter of the Eastern Stars.

For a long time she has been in declining health, and Thursday, December 15th, 1921, her spirit took its flight into the radiant Morning Land to abide forever with God.

"I stood by a Mother's bedside—
Where she lay in Death's cold embrace,
And a light came out of the darkness
And fell on her peaceful face.

It seemed like a crown of glory
Immeshed in her silver hair,
And I tho't some angel Mother
Might have lingered to place it there.
It illum'd every care-worn feature,
With the love-light of its glow;
And she'll wear that look of tender grace
In Paradise I know."

Funeral services were held at the home on Midland Avenue, Sunday afternoon, December 18, 1921, conducted by her pastor, R. T. Stimmel, and interment was made in the Alton Cemetery, by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

ICE CREAM SPECIAL FOR CHRISTMAS AT WEBER'S.

Don't forget Viola Bryan has all kinds of Larkin products at her home, 10 Highland Ave.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. John Elsey, of 91 North Terrace, will be surprisingly pleased to know of the success along literary lines, of their daughter, Margaret, 15 years of age, now sophomore at the High School of Commerce, having written a number of remarkable stories. She is evidently gifted in story and dramatic literature and is endeavoring to develop her talents as other Hilltop young people are doing along various lines. Her latest is a beautiful Christmas story to be given at school on Friday. At a meeting of the girls' organization recently, Miss Margaret modestly offered one of her plays for an entertainment. The Junior Queen Esther Circle, is an auxiliary to the Woman's Home Missionary Society, with an object to interest young people in relief work among our own people doing their part in winning "America for Christ."

This story, which is so life like, pretty and uplifting, was suggested by a dream, which during the rendition of the play, is related by "Litt'e Betty." The title is "Betty's and Jack's Christmas." The presentation will be given at Glenwood M. E. Church on Friday, December 30, at 8 p. m. Admission 15 cents. Come.

A CHRISTMAS POEM

(By Dorothea Perry, a Hilltop Girl)

My child, so ragged and torn,
Why do you wander about so forlorn?
"O, sir, I beg but a penny of thee;
A penny to buy some bread for me."

This is the day our Saviour was born.
This is the day He came to earth;
This is the day of His wondrous birth.

The Christ gave all He had to give.
He taught us that the way to live
Was to be cheerful, patient, loving and true.
And that is why he died for you.

As then, I went upon my way—
Glad to make someone happy that day,
The day Jesus came to earth,
The day of a Savior's wonderful birth.

LSTOY JEALOUS OF WIFE

Their Marriage in a Way Romantic, Though She Had Much to Forgive in Him.

In his book, "Family Happiness," Leo Tolstoy tells his own romance. He was a lifelong friend of both Mrs. and Doctor Baer, parents of Sofia Andreyevna, whom he loved ardently. Her name is indicative of her ancestry, her mother being a high-bred Russian and her father a German physician.

Sofia and her sisters were all accomplished in household arts, as well as in the more elegant studies befitting young women of their station in life.

From the very first, his love for this girl, many years his junior, was strong and passionate. Finally he asked her to marry him. It was his wish that the wedding take place immediately, but Sofia declared that she must have a trousseau first. They were ultimately married in September 1862.

Although Sofia was just as much the idealist as her husband, she was far more practical, and made a perfect wife from the domestic point of view.

Their life was not entirely without disillusionment. Ardently in love with his wife, Tolstoy at times exhibited insane jealousy. Unjust suspicions were frequently manifested, but Sofia had great wisdom and understanding, and did not let this failing come between them. He always repented later and humbly begged forgiveness for his rash actions.

BEFORE MATCHES WERE MADE

Primitive Peoples Had Ingenious Means of Making Fires That Answered the Same Purpose.

Two methods of making fire were in use among the aborigines of North America at the time of the discovery. The first method consisted of striking a spark from flint and pyrites—a hard ore containing usually considerable iron. This method was practiced by the Eskimos and by the Athapasca and Algonquin tribes ranging across the continent from the Pacific coast to Newfoundland and down the Atlantic coast.

The most valued and most effectual method of making fire known to the Indians was that of the reciprocating motion of wood on wood and igniting the ground off particles through heat generated by friction. The simplest method was to whirl rapidly backward and forward a wooden rod or drill. The drill turned in a lower piece of wood which may be called the hearth. The drill was worked near the border of the hearth, cutting a socket. From the socket a narrow canal was cut in the edge of the hearth, the function of the canal being to collect the powdered wood ground off by the friction of the drill, as within this wood meal the heat rose to the ignition point.

The Pause of Emphasis.

The historic old church of St. Michael's, in Charleston, S. C.—to be a member of which is the open sesame to Charleston society—had at one time a very eccentric pastor, whose congregation never knew just what he would do next. One hot July afternoon he entered his pulpit, with the sounding board above, sat down and wiped the perspiration from his face, remarking, in a calm, unruffled tone: "D—n hot day."

Of course the congregation was thunderstruck. With all his peculiarities, they had not dreamed of anything like this. So still was the audience that the drop of a pin could have been heard. After a long time, when the perspiration had been carefully wiped from cheek and brow, he concluded:

"That's what I heard an irreverent young man say as I came in."—Harper's Magazine.

Had to Be Masters of Craft.

Carved and hand-made chests, sideboards, tables, chairs and other antiques are rightly valued by people of discriminating taste. In the Fifteenth century men were known to have worked eight years or more carving a single one of these intricate pieces, fitting the drawers perfectly and balancing everything. Certainly any piece of furniture on which those masters of the cabinetmaker's art spent so much time and thought are worthy of appreciation.

An apprentice to the art of cabinetmaking commonly worked from three to eight years making his first piece of furniture. This work then was passed upon by jurors, and if the verdict was "imperfect," it was burned before the door of the maker and he was forbidden to make furniture for sale until he had redeemed himself with an acceptable piece.

LOVED ALL FEATHERED FOLK

Audubon Name Immortal Because of His Splendid Work for American Native Birds.

John James Audubon, an American naturalist and bird lover, who did perhaps more than any other man to interest Americans in their native birds, was born in Meadville, La., of French parents, in 1780. He studied in France. In 1798 he settled near Philadelphia, where he lived for ten years, devoting himself to the study of birds. Later he spent considerable time in the West, wandering through the woods in close touch with his feathered friends. In 1826 Audubon went to England, exhibiting his bird drawings, which he finally published in a work containing 435 colored plates of birds the size of life, entitled "The Birds of America." A copy of this complete work today is worth a small fortune.

On his return to America Audubon labored on an illustrated work, "The Quadrupeds of America." Audubon never instituted any movement for the preservation of birds, for in his day much of the country was wild, and it looked as though there were no danger of birds ever becoming extinct. It was his genuine love for the feathered folk that caused the Audubon society to be named for him.

The Audubon society has done much to prevent wanton destruction and to create a sentiment against the wearing of birds and feathers on millinery. It is largely due to Audubon societies throughout the country that large tracts of ground have been set apart as bird reservations. The national office of the organization is in New York city.

WHERE ETIQUETTE IS RIGID

Visitor to Mongolian Yourt Has Many Important Rules of Conduct to Remember.

A Mongolian yourt is an umbrella-like framework of trellis wood covered with thick felt which when new is perfectly white, circular in form, having a dome-shaped roof, and is about 14 to 18 feet in diameter, the door always facing south or southwest, and painted red. On arriving at a yourt on a Mongolian pony it is very necessary to remember that your riding whip must be left outside, laid on the roof, before you enter. To take it, or any kind of stick, into the house would not be regarded as a simple breach of manners, such as taking your umbrella into the drawing room when paying a call in this country, but amounts to an act of aggression.

As one enters the yourt one cannot help noticing that the floor is covered with semicircular mats of very thick white felt with bold applique designs in black, as a border. In the center of the building an iron casket contains burning argol that flames brightly and sends up ascending smoke that escapes through a circular hole in the roof. One must be careful to select one of the lowly seats on the ground on the left of the fire till the invitation is given to "come up higher," which of course, will follow.

Chinese Wedding Customs.

On her wedding day the Chinese bride is clad in red and carried in a sedan chair covered with red. Any person who wishes may turn back the chair curtains and have a look at the bride. Hayseed takes the place of rice and confetti. The bride's hair is elaborately oiled, and so when the girls throw hayseeds at her they stick. When she has reached the end of her journey she has come to the home of her husband and must bear the candid criticism of the whole family.

The wedding ceremony is nothing more than a rice affair. Instead of throwing it, the guests eat it. The husband-and-wife-to-be eat rice from each other's bowl, then mix the rice and both eat from the same bowl—and they are married.

Of course there is a feast, but the custom makes it such that the American father of a reception-giving bride might envy the Chinese father of the bride. Every guest contributes something, and so it costs very little.

Yale's Fine Gothic Buildings.

In the Harkness quadrangle at Yale university the architect, James Gamble Rogers, has created, in keeping with the express wishes of the university authorities, a group of Gothic buildings that it is believed will bear comparison with any in the world. Based primarily upon Tudor Gothic, they yet embody many varieties of the style and include, as a matter of fact, elements that the curious student will find tell practically the whole story of Gothic development.

In their marvelous details and picturesqueness they are the most distinctive collegiate buildings in existence. There is a remarkable and enticing variety of designs in their construction and the most surprising play of fancy.

Janice's Compliment.

The other evening Janice was watching her up-to-date grandmother dress for a ball. The child surveyed her grandmother from all angles as the dressing progressed.

Finally she said "Granny, you look 'ust beautiful now."

As her grandmother finished she put on a gown trimmed with lynx on which there were a few tails of the animal.

Janice looked the finished product over and exclaimed, "and now, Granny, you look 'ust like a dog."

Mr. Gimlet's Best Christmas Present

by CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD

OLD Mr. Gimlet was sitting all alone by himself. The cold December wind was driving the snow against the frosty windows, and now and then it seemed to fairly screech at him. Some of the snow appeared to have got into his hair, and some of the frost into his heart, for he looked old, and cold, and grim. The firelight shadows that played on the wall were like the thoughts that went to and fro in his mind in the light of the memories of the brighter days of the past. The empty chairs reminded him of his friendlessness, the slow ticking of the old clock, as it tried to be a companion, only made him feel how lonely he was. He felt as much out of the world, as far away from its gladness as the picture of his grandfather that hung over the shelf.

Mr. Gimlet was wondering what he would get for Christmas. He had spent many years in wondering what he would get, and had gotten a good many things. No one had a better house than he, few had as much money as he had. There was a park, there was a garden; within and without and all about him were the things that money can buy. Yes, Mr. Gimlet was as rich as money and things can make a man. And yet, although all these things had not made him happy, he was wishing for more. He did not know any better than to wish for more, and, though he could not think of anything that he needed, he hoped that someone would think of something or other that he might want and that might give him a gleam of real Christmas joy.

Away out on a prairie the Bump family were holding a consultation, after the children had gone to bed. At that moment the father and mother of the family were perplexed and even a good deal worried. The Bumps had been practicing farming for some time, but without anticipated results. The children didn't see anything the matter with farming. The move out of the smoky city had been an entrance into paradise for them. Donald had ten hens and a rooster. Dorothy owned two Muscovy ducks, with green feathers. Kenneth had a little pony that they called "Bigger," because they thought he would grow. Small Edith kept a flower bed that she called her "gardy." There was a pony cart. They had raised a 43-pound watermelon. Father had said that the rest of the garden wouldn't amount to a bill of beans, but it had. There was apt to be enough for yum yum cake, with raisins in it, to go around. Why, it was like a perpetual picnic! And even now, with all things under the snow blanket, and the pony and the two cows safe in the barn, farmer Bump had laughed with the happy, rosy children, as the dog Jake toiled up the hill with the sled, so that they all might go shouting down again. "They're a jolly bunch," said farmer Bump. But that night the Bumps were holding a consultation. Although the two cows in the barn were bare, yet there was a blanket on them. The consultation was about that blanket. Farmer Bump called it a mortgage and didn't know how he was going to pay it. No wonder it was an anxious consultation. Short crops and a mortgage! Enough to flatten out even the Bumps!

But while the Bumps were talking things over, the children were having dreams. They had slept awake for a while, talking about the best place to hang up Christmas stockings, and a part of the conversation downstairs, the mortgage part, had come up to their ears. A little of the worry, too, had come with it, so that they fell asleep with a little uneasiness about the blanket that does not keep things warm, but makes them cold, and wondering what a mortgage could be, and why no one could take it off without money. In his dream Donald heard a boy singing this song:

"Sing, little Jesus, sing for me.
There's nothing on my Christmas tree."

You see, this little boy had a tree, but there wasn't a thing on it, not even a leaf. So he planned how to get something to grow upon it. Finally, he sang the song that Donald heard in his dream, and the next time he looked out there was his tree, full of red and gold apples, with leaves on all the twigs and many pretty things among them, and Donald saw it all in his dream. So, when he awoke, Donald thought he would sing the song too, and see if Jesus couldn't take the shadow of that awful mortgage away, and he sang:

Sing, little Jesus, sing for me!
There's a mortgage on our Christmas tree.

When Dorothy awoke she remembered that she had dreamed about writing a letter to Santa Claus, and so she went and wrote it. This was the letter:

Dear Santa Claus:
There's something the matter with our cows. They've got a mortgage on 'em. Only money can cure 'em. Please come and cure 'em, so's we can have a Christmas tree. I will be good.
Your hopeful
DOROTHY.

Then, when father went to town, with the little pony, Bigger, he put the letter into the post office, only he directed it to Mrs. Bump's brother, Mr. Ephraim Gimlet.

Mr. Gimlet was very much surprised to hear from the Bumps. He had forgotten that he had a sister, and that there were a lot of little hopeful bumps. An old trouble had made him bitter and forgetful, and he had felt more alone in the world than he really was. As he sat again by the firelight, but on a clear and moonlit night, he mused on things past with a new tenderness in his heart and welcomed a new thought that came warmly to him and brought a lovely purpose with it. He would play Santa Claus, and give himself the surprise of making others happy!

So the day before Christmas things happened at the Bump house. As Mr. Bump went to the wayside post box he found two letters. One of them made him sad, for it was from the man who held the mortgage, and it said that the time for payment had come. It meant to Mr. Bump, "your money, or your cows." But the other letter was from Mr. Gimlet, and it made Mr. Bump laugh until he cried, for it was a check for $500, with some kindly, friendly words and good wishes, enough to cure the cows and all the family troubles.

The next day the carrier brought a most promising looking big box from Uncle Gimlet, so that the Christmas tree was full of happy surprises for the little folks and a gift or two for the big ones. Mother made a big pile in the dishpan and the children found out what was in it. Dorothy poked a hole through the pasteboard ... and pulled out a maple sugar heart. Donald got a red sugar heart. ... neth got a white sugar heart. Edith got a yellow sugar heart. Mother said it was Uncle Gimlet's kind heart that had made them all so happy.

Then Mr. Gimlet got another letter. It was a round robin from all the Bumps, with the little Bump names and marks upon it, too. It made the old man very happy He was sitting among a lot of pleasant things that had been sent in for his Christmas tree, but he was not thinking very much of them. He sat with the letter in his hand and a far-off look in his eyes as he thought of the sweetness of love, and felt that the best gift that he had received was the happy surprise that he had given to the people on the prairie farm.

"Divinity" Fudge.

Boil together two cupfuls of granulated sugar, one cupful of maple sirup, one cupful of water and a tablespoonful of vinegar until a little of it hardens when dropped in cold water, and then add a teaspoonful of vanilla and take from the fire. While this mixture has been cooking, a cupful of granulated sugar should have been put over the fire in another saucepan, with a half-cupful of cold water, and boiled until the mixture spins a thread from the tip of a spoon. This should at this stage be beaten up with the stiffly whipped whites of two eggs, and this stirred into the first preparation, which should by now have cooled slightly. Beat the two hard until they begin to stiffen, when turn in two cupfuls of chopped nut kernels. Drop on paper or pour into pans and cut in shapes desired.—Delineator.

HAS NEW THEORY OF SPEECH

Came About in Man Through Walking Erect and Using Hands as Hands, Says Savage

Why have none of the higher animals developed speech? asks Dr. D. Naunyn in the Deutsched Archivfuer Klinische Medisin (Leipsig). He points out that the sounds made by animals and birds are imitative, like the "da-da" of a happy baby. But the infant progresses beyond echo-speech to actual speech, which no animal or bird can do.

And he proceeds to answer this question, says the New York World, on the theory that man has evolved from the lower animals—a theory that is rapidly losing ground among serious scientific men—about as follows:

When man began to walk erect and use his hands, the right hand was found more convenient for attacks and defense, gestures, and the ordinary uses of life; the left hand being used more for carrying things.

This greater use of the right hand, not the more abundant blood supply in the left hemisphere (criminals have the latter), was what stimulated the left hemisphere of the brain to higher development. This provided Romanes' "casual anatomic factor" that distinguishes man from animals and made articulate speech possible. It is a consequence of man's walking erect and using his hands as hands. Speaking and the organ of speech developed together. The singing of birds and their balancing power are by-products of the evolution of their organ of hearing, as also music in man, along with rhythm and dancing, although a music sense evidently co-operates with the internal ear.

BARBER BEARS TRADE NAME

Word Describing His Occupation Declared One of the Curiosities of the Language.

Our friend the barber bears a trade name, or a name of occupation which is related to barbed-wire, barbarian, Barbary coast and Barbados. It is also related to "barbet" which was an old name for a poodle dog, and it is also related to "barbette," over which big guns are fired. It is one of the curiosities of our language.

Some of these words have come into the English language from the French and others from the Spanish, but they all go back to the Latin word, "barba," which meant "beard." The French got the word from their Roman conquerors and civilizers and made it over into "barbe" and when a man shaved himself he "barbed" himself, or as perhaps we would put it today he "disbarbed" or "de-barbed" himself The French made a noun to fit the fellow who took the beard or barbe off another fellow and they called him a "barbier," and if it had been the custom for ladies to barber a man they would have called her a "barbiere," with a grave accent over the first "e." The Norman conquerors of England took over the word with them and finally our Anglo-Saxon, Norse-Celtic, Norse-French, etc., ancestors shortened "barbier" to barber.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Early Umbrellas.

Among the Greeks and Romans umbrellas were carried solely by women, and it was regarded as effeminacy for a man to carry one.

The use of umbrellas became very general in Italy and France in the Sixteenth century.

Early in the Eighteenth century it was the practice to keep umbrellas in the coffee houses as a protection to guests caught in an unexpected shower.

At length there arose a man who flouted public ridicule and became a devotee to the umbrella. He was Jonas Hanway, a traveler. He had an extraordinary big and stout one made for his own use. For 30 years Hanway and his umbrella were a familiar figure along the Strand, and many a shot of ridicule was fired at him. He died in 1786, but lived long enough to see his example commonly followed.

The Webb and Drumm Insurance Agency located at Suite 412 Commerce Bldg., has recently established a branch office at 2393½ W. Broad st., with J. W. Orebaugh as manager. This agency, while comparatively young, has established connections with some of the oldest and most reliable old-line companies and are equipped to furnish "Complete Insurance Service." Mr. Orebaugh and Mr. H. P. Fisher, his associate, have made an intensive study of the insurance business and are giving special attention to new dwellings and buildings under construction writing a special builder's risk form.

The entire organization takes this opportunity to wish their numerous friends and clients a merry Christmas and a very prosperous New Year.

A few days since, Mr. Roy Hauntz, sitting in his home, wishing to read the Hilltop Record, asked Mrs. H. if the Record had come, whereupon his little youngster rushed in the other room and brought a grafonola record to him.

PORT FAMOUS, THOUGH SMALL

Brightlingsea, in England, Was Very Ancient Town as Far Back as Year 1441.

Tucked away among numerous creeks and waterworks is the town of Brightlingsea, the home of "white wings," for this little settlement is the yachting man's utopia and is, in this respect, peerless on the east coast of England. It was from Brickelsey, as the inhabitants call the place, that Lord Brassey started on his world tour in his yacht, the Sunbeam, and Sir Thomas Lipton selected most of his crews for the various Shamrocks. Apart from yacht building and repairing, Brightlingsea has other claims to fame, for she is a noncorporate member of the Federation of the Cinque Ports, and is a "limb" of Sandwich. She is the only place belonging to the federation not situated in Kent or Sussex. It is surmised that the incorporation of Brightlingsea in the Cinque ports may be an imitation of the Roman system, but, unfortunately, an ancient manuscript, the Domesday of the Ports, has been lost, so that the exact date of the membership of Brightlingsea in the federation cannot be stated. In 1441 this membership was declared to have existed ab antiquo. Of the many privileges which have become obsolete or are not exercised, two important concessions still enjoyed by the inhabitants are exemption from serving on juries and from military service. — Christian Science Monitor.

LEGENDS OF THE ESKIMOS

Really Poetical Beliefs Held by Primitive People Concerning the Sun and Moon.

There are many legends of the moon. Almost every ancient people has its moon story, but that of the Eskimos is particularly interesting and poetical. It tells how, long ago, before there were a sun and a moon in the heavens, a brother and sister lived alone in an igloo. One day the brother grievously ill-treated his beautiful sister, who became so enraged that, picking up a flaming brand, she chased him out of the igloo and into the sky. And ever since then she has been chasing him. She is the sun and he the moon.

Since the first astrologer foretold the future, and the first gypsy warned of a "dark stranger," the full moon at the birth of a female child has been supposed to portend an unfortunate career. Upon those male children born at the full of the moon a healthy, vigorous body and longevity were bestowed. Children of both sexes, born on the wane of the moon or on the increase, would assuredly die young, or if they did outlive expectations it would be because they were guilty of some great crime.

Nature's Wood Works.

One of the greatest sources of ornate wood is to be found in burls which are malformations of tree growth produced by insect attack or other pathologic condition. The most valuable burls are found at the roots. In walnut they often weigh from 500 pounds to a ton, says the American Forestry Magazine. They are so likely to be defective that it is a gamble as to how they will open up in sawing. There are thousands of little buds with little circlets of wood about them and irregular pigment deposits which work up into fantastic designs with little or no resemblance to normal wood. The bowls of briar pipes are made from the burls of various shrubs belonging to the heath family—the American "briar" coming from the mountain laurel. The California redwood supplies burls which are made into all sorts of novelties and souvenirs.

PHONE DUE TO DEAF MUTES

While Teaching "Visible Speech" It Is Said Alexander Graham Bell Made Great Discovery.

That the telephone was born in America, and that Alexander Graham Bell made his discovery in Boston of the only way in which speech could be transmitted, was due to circumstances full of the deepest human interest, says the Telephone Press Service. That Bell came to Boston to teach his father's method of visible speech, was due to the insistence of a New England woman, Miss Sarah Fuller, principal of the Horace Mann School for Deaf Mutes.

Miss Fuller so impressed the Boston school board with the importance of this method of instruction for the unfortunate children under her care, that, after vainly trying to secure of Bell's father, who had invented the system, the board, upon his recommendation, offered the son, Alexander Graham Bell, $500 to come to Boston and give a course of instruction at the school.

He went there April 1, 1871, and thereafter divided his time between teaching the theory of visible speech to the teachers, and in practical instructions to the pupils. In 1872 he opened a normal school for teachers. In 1873 he accepted an appointment as professor of vocal physiology in the school of oratory of Boston university. In 1875, Professor Bell made the happy discovery that led to the invention of the telephone. He was then twenty-eight years old.

"RABBIT" IS PROPER NAME

Combination of Toasted Cheese and Brown Ale Has Been Incorrectly Called "Rarebit."

The original name of the combination of toasted cheese and good brown ale was, it is an historical fact, "Welsh Rabbit." It was a slang term, at that. It was one of a large class of similar terms describing in a humorous manner the special dish, product or peculiarity of a particular district. Thus, in England, a "German Duck" was the slang name for a sheep's head stewed in onions. "Leicestershire Plover" was the name given to a bag pudding, and "Digby Chicken" was the slang term for herring.

Similar examples of metaphorical names for favorite dishes are found in every country. And long before the word "rarebit" was ever heard of, the familiar dish of "cheese and ale" was known as a "Welsh Rabbit."

It was only when some solemn etymologist came along, and gravely noting the fact that there was nothing in the dish to even remotely suggest a connection with a rabbit, suggested that the word was undoubtedly a corruption of "rarebit," which would make some sense at least. So "rarebit" it became among the purists. And the early dictionaries adopted it, though the modern ones acknowledge that "rabbit" has the right of way.

Black Walnut Valuable.

"Of all the forest trees found in the original forests of America," says American Forestry, "the black walnut probably suffered most at the hands of the early settlers. This is due to the well-known fact that it stood upon the best land in the fertile valleys and bordering foothills. These areas were selected by the pioneer farmers for their clearings and farms. A large number of the choicest black walnut trees were felled and burned simply to get rid of them. Many more were split into fence rails or put to other similar ordinary uses before the real merits of the wood became known.

"Now the wood of black walnut brings a high price. It is no longer destroyed and wasted, but every available piece is collected and manufactured into some useful article. It is not used any more for rough lumber, as it was in the early days, but all of it goes to factories, where it is converted into finished articles."

Young Sparrow's First Flight.

I was walking around my stables and stopped to watch a pair of sparrows enticing their offspring from a nest in a hole in the wall. One of the young ones, more venturesome than the others, fluttered off toward a cock feeding in the yard with some hens. The cock at once ran up and seized it in his beak; the hens, thinking this was something good to eat ran after him. The hunt, however was of short duration, for as soon as they got out into the open ground, a scavenger kite came with a rush, snatched the victim from the astonished cock and made off. The cock and hens then fled squawking for shelter

WHY CALLED "OLD DOMINION"

Two Explanations Have Been Given for Nickname Bestowed on the State of Virginia.

There are two explanations as to how the state of Virginia came to be called "Old Dominion." The one given in the following account is generally regarded as the most plausible:

"In Capt. John Smith's 'History of Virginia,' edition of 1629, there is a map of the settlements of Virginia, which at that time included New England, as well as every other part of the British settlements in America. He there calls our present Virgina 'Ould Virginia'—the word old being so spelled at that time—in contradistinction to the New England colony, which is called 'New Virginia.' Here, then, we have the word 'ould,' the distinctive word of the title. Now, we know that, from the settlement of the colony to the Revolution, every act of parliament, every letter of the king to the governor, designated Virginia as the 'colony and dominion' of Virginia. Here is found the other word, and the change in common talk from 'Ould Virginia' to 'Old Dominion' was easy, imperceptible and almost inevitable."

The other explanation is that the title "Old Dominion" was bestowed upon Virginia by Charles II, because the colony had refused to recognize the government of Cromwell, and, after the execution of Charles I had transferred its allegiance to his son. In gratitude for this loyalty, Charles II caused the arms of Virginia to be quartered with those of England, Scotland and Ireland, as a distinctive portion of the Old Dominion and an independent member of the United Kingdom.

"If you mean a husband who doesn't come home merely to eat an occasional meal, get a few winks of sleep, take a bath and change his clothes, I quite agree with you that every married woman should have one," said the cross-looking matron at the door, "but you don't look to me like a person who could supply that deficiency. In a quiet back street of Dublin is the Church of St. Michan's, and in its vaults may be seen one of the strangest sights of the country. There lie the bodies of people buried centuries ago, which, owing to some curious preservative properties of the air or soil of that particular place, never decay. Their skins "tan" into a flexible chamois-like leather. The limbs can be moved about with ease, the finger nails are perfect, and in some cases the features are fairly distinct. This is especially the case with the body of an infant, buried in 1698. There is in another vault a body said to be that of a Crusader, and in another one said to be that of a brother of King O'Toole. One very gruesome sight is that of the headless bodies of two unfortunates who were beheaded during the famous rebellion of '98.

FISH NOT BRED FROM EGGS

Scientists Have Discovered Small Species That Undoubtedly Bear Their Young Alive.

The habit of laying eggs is so nearly universal among fishes that probably most people will be surprised, says Science Siftings, to learn that certain small species actually bear their young alive. Among these is the large family of killifishes, or Cyprinodontidae. In such species the young are born in a comparatively advanced stage of development. When born they closely resemble the adult fish. All of them are very tenacious of life.

That the bearing of the young alive by certain fish is not significant of a higher state of evolution, as the layman might naturally suppose, is proved by the fact that it occurs in many species of the sharks and their cousins the rays, though these are among the earliest, i. e., the most ancient fishes that we know. This habit of procreation has been developed in order to give the young fry a better chance of survival than they might otherwise have—it is literally a case of "fewer babies but better ones." The most curious of all these fishes is the genus Anableps which lives in the streams of the American tropics. This is sometimes called the four-eyed fish, for the reason that its large prominent eyes, which actually resemble marbles on the top of the head, are divided horizontally into two parts, the lower half being fitted for water vision and the upper half for air vision.

BARNACLES LONG A MYSTERY

Up to a Comparatively Few Years Ago the Small Creatures Were Wrongly Classed.

So indefinite and hazy were the results of investigation in its case that until a very few years ago the barnacle was classed with the molluscs, although it is really a crustacean. It is developed from free-swimming larvae and attaches itself to rocks or timbers, which it never leaves again unless torn off by force.

There prevailed during the Middle ages a curious superstition that the barnacle was the egg of a migratory goose, the eggs being attached to the branches of trees that overhung the water. Not until it was found that the bird had its nesting place in the Arctic regions and came South during the polar winter was this fiction disproved. But the bird is still known as the barnacle goose.

The barnacle also attaches itself to living organisms, one of its favorite lodging places being the huge bulk of the whale. Sometimes, it is contended, it ventures even into the jaws of the big mammal. It is one of the paradoxes of nature that the leviathan of the deep is utterly powerless to cope with the small crustacean, which, at its largest size, when within the shell, is about as big as a chestnut. It is believed that whales sometimes rub themselves against ships in their attempts to rid themselves of their unwelcome tenants.

Some Compensation.

An official of a large corporation, which had made a rather poor earnings report, commented with satisfaction on the fact that competing companies had had considerably larger deficits.

"We can derive some consolation from this," he said, and went on:

"It reminds me of the story of the man who was traveling through the West Virginia mountains and, approaching a poor cottage, saw three boys, two of whom were sobbing loudly while the smallest seemed not to have a care in the world. At the door of the cottage, the father of the boys stood, gun in hand, and the stranger inquired the source of the sorrow of the two older boys.

"'Waal, stranger,' said the mountaineer, 'it was this way: Today is the birthday of my youngest kid. I didn't have any money to buy him a birthday present so I licked his two brothers.'"—Wall Street Journal.

Deep Gratitude.

It is related that the famous Sheridan went to a hairdresser's on one occasion to order a wig. The barber was a liberal soul, and on the orator being measured, a bottle of port was produced and so much hospitality was shown that Sheridan's heart was touched.

When they rose from the table and were about to separate, Sheridan, looking the barber full in the face, said: "On reflecting, I don't intend that you shall make my wig!"

Astonished, and with a blank visage, the barber exclaimed: "But, Mr. Sheridan, how can I have displeased you?"

"Why, look you," said Sheridan, "you are an honest fellow, and I repeat it, you shan't make my wig, for I never intended to pay for it. I'll go to another less worthy son of the craft."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

A Masterpiece.

An eminent critic was wandering through an art gallery, and, pointing to a canvas hung conspicuously on the wall, he inquired of a man standing by, "What can they mean by allowing such a daub here?"

"It has been awarded the art prize," was the answer.

"Awarded the art prize!" gasped the critic.

"Why, there is not a trace of art about it!"

"Exactly so," said the other; "art is to conceal art, you know!"—Edinburgh Scotsman.

ROCK THAT CAN BE SAWED

Oregon Product That Would Seem to Have Peculiar and Most Valuable Properties.

Tufa, a volcanic ash rock, with properties possessed by no other stone, is being quarried near the town of Mount Angel, Ore., the only place in the United States where it has been found in sufficient quantities for commercial use. The stone is first blasted out and is then hauled to a mill and handled like lumber. It is cut into blocks or "boards" of any desired dimensions. Saws, planers and drills are used on it exactly as in a lumber or planing mill. The finished product closely resembles lumber, but is cut only in short lengths. It is a light-gray color, with spots of white running through it, and weighs only 80 pounds to the cubic foot, about one-half the weight of common building stone.

A peculiar characteristic of the Oregon tufa is that it can be nailed. Nails are driven into it easily as into oak and other hardwoods, but are harder to pull out. Tufa furniture, nailed together, has been made experimentally. It is regularly used for fence posts, moldings, sills and many other purposes where nailing is required. Recently it has been discovered that when pulverized it makes a soft, velvety powder which is an excellent filler for rubber. It is predicted that it will supplant all other materials for this purpose, thus utilizing the refuse.—Horace E. Thomas in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

WHEN ROMANS RULED PARIS

Masters of the World Left Many Traces of Their Occupation of the French Capital.

"Nothing has been spared to make the Palais des Thermes a truly splendid abode. An aqueduct brought pure and wholesome water from the springs of Rungis, that is, about three leagues from the center of Paris. For the longest part of its course it was underground, but it crossed the valley of Arcueil by a series of high arches, some foundations of which time has respected, admirably constructed and finished like the walls of the hall of Thermes."—De Guilhermy.

N. B.—The Roman remains, always known as Palais des Thermes, in the garden adjoining the Hotel de Cluny, probably belong to buildings erected A. D. 300, when Paris was a Gallo-Roman town, by Constantius Chlorus. It has been sometimes affirmed that Emperor Julian the Apostate was proclaimed and resided here, but it is far more probable that he lived on the island in the Seine, and that these buildings were simply those of magnificent baths. The most perfect part of the baths is a great hall, decided to have been the frigidarium, which is exceedingly massive and majestic; of the tepidarium, only the ruined walls remain.—"Walks in Paris," Augustus J. C. Hare.

Too Much Expected of Milk.

The use of milk as a food has been so extensively exploited by the milk interests that there exists a somewhat erroneous idea about it which a recent speaker, before the American Pediatric society, is endeavoring to correct. These errors principally concern the group of children between the ages of one and six years. These errors might be classified under the headings: 1. Prolonged use of milk as an exclusive article of diet. 2. Increased quantities of milk given along with other foods. Milk might not only be used too long as an exclusive article of diet and in excessive quantities with other foods, but its nutritional value might be injured by boiling. The laity were taught, and rightly so, that milk was an ideal breeding place for germs, and that the growth of these germs might be inhibited by keeping the milk on ice or the milk might be brought to a boil. The use of boiled milk was becoming more prevalent and many injuries to nutrition occurred.

Measure Your Figure.

A Brazilian art scholar claims to have discovered how the old masters of painting and sculpture worked. He has taken the pictures and shown, by drawing lines and angles on them, how the artists gave their compositions strictly mathematical foundations.

Ancient Egyptian artists had a rule of proportions based on the length of the middle finger, the distance of which was contained 19 times in the length of the whole body.

Greek artists adopted these proportions until it was established that the face must be a tenth part and the head an eighth part of the total height of the body. The face was divided into three equal parts—from the roots of the hair to the root of the nose; from the root of the nose to its point, and from the end of the nose to the chin.

Safe by That Time.

"Nice children you have. Which is this?"

"The fifth."

"He seems to be the healthiest looking of the lot."

"Yes, by the time he came along his mother had run out of theories."—Boston Transcript.

Found Out.

Phylline—Oh, Eileen, dear, have you been married long?

Eileen—Long enough to know that my husband is about as truthful as the oldest inhabitant in a country village.—London Answers.

The Meanest Man.

Many years have passed since Mark Twain died, and the greatest tribute to his genius is that no humorist has arisen to take his place. Opinions differ as to which was his funniest story, but there are those who think that his yarn about the meanest man is not easily beaten. "The meanest man I ever knew," he said, "lived in Hannibal. He sold his son-in-law the half of a very fine cow, and then refused to share the milk with him, on the ground that he had only sold him the front half. The son-in-law was always compelled to provide all the cow's fodder, and to carry water to her twice a day. Finally the cow butted the old man through a barbed-wire fence, and he sued his son-in-law for damages."

Rheumatic in One Foot.

"Well, Eph," said his ex-employer, meeting the old darky on the street, "how is the rheumatism 'these days?"

"Porely, sah, porely," was the dejected reply. "Believe me, Marse Rixby, I'se jest a movin' picture ob pain."—Boston Transcript.

PUT ANTIQUARIANS IN FLURRY

Historic Old English Building, Long Hidden Under "Improvements," Recently Brought to Light.

Lost for centuries, a building of historic and civic importance was discovered at Hereford, England, owing to the collapse of a modern chimney in the Booth Hall hotel during repairs. The building is an ancient, timber-built structure known as the Booth Hall. According to local antiquarians a license was granted in 1284 for the purchase of the site for a municipal building, and it was afterward used as a house of detention for freemen and bankrupts. When the chimney collapsed parts of the roof and the ceilings of upper bedrooms were brought down, and some fine oak beams and rafters were exposed. Closer examination showed the portions of carved and molded work. A member of the Hereford Woolhope club, a local society whose chief interest is the preservation of ancient work of the county, persuaded the owners to restore the building, and after the partitions and ceilings of the old attic bedrooms had been removed three handsome hammer-beam principals and two tie-beam principals were discovered, the hammer-beams having carved brackets, with figureheads, and the tie-beam principals with paneled king posts contained beautiful tracery panels. Cusped wind-braces between the principals decorate and strengthen the structure.

BETROTHED AT ELEVEN YEARS

Anne of Austria a Mere Child When Her Marriage to King of France Was Arranged.

Anne of Austria, whose full name was Marie Anne Mauricette, was the daughter of Philip III of Spain and Marguerite of Austria. Her marriage to Louis XIII, king of France, was arranged by the rulers of the two countries to bind them together. Anne was but eleven years old when she was betrothed to Louis, which plainly proves that she did not marry from choice.

The marriage ceremony took place in France. Louis was unable to meet his consort when she arrived in France, so he sent his favorite, Luynes, to meet her with a note from his majesty. At this time the dark clouds of unhappiness which were to mar their future married life were not visible, and Anne sent in answer to Louis' gallant note, a charming message in her own musical language.

The intrigues of state were far too sinister to allow much marital joy for the royal couple. Personal interests were swamped in the court interests. Anne outlived her husband, who left a son and heir to the throne of France. She was very sad at the death of Louis, who seemed to have a place in her heart, even though she had not married him from choice.

No Time for a Precedent.

A negro couple, about middle age, presented themselves to a justice of the peace the other day for the marriage ceremony. After they were duly pronounced man and wife, Mandy drew away to one side while Jack paid the justice. When they were out in the hall Mandy inquired:

"What'd you-all pay dat man fer marryin' us?"

"Jes what he said it was wuth," Jack replied.

"Well, what-all did he say it was wuth?" Mandy insisted.

"Five dollahs!" Jack informed her.

"Five dollahs!" exclaimed Mandy. "Man, man, dat ain't no way to do nuthin'! You-all go right back dar and give dat marryin'-man another five dollahs. Dis is de third time Ah been married an' Ah ain't nevah yet been married for less 'en ten dollahs, and Ah ain't gonna sta't now!"—Kansas City Star.

The Bitter End.

The expression "bitter end," as when one says, "I will follow it to the bitter end," is a nautical term, borrowed from a ship's cable. If you have ever been on a big ship you must have noticed two big pieces of wood sticking up out of the deck forward, alongside each other. They sometimes have a windlass between them, and they are used to secure the cable that goes to the anchor. These pieces of wood are called the bitts. When the ship comes to anchor and the cable is paid out, all that part of it which is abaft or behind the bitts is called the bitter end of the cable. In a storm or in poor holding ground for anchors the more cable that is paid out the better the anchor will hold, and when the captain is at all doubtful, he pays out his cable to the bitter end sooner than risk any harm to his ship.

His Last Chance.

The wedding was to take place that morning. Most people were of opinion that the bride, aged forty-five, had pursued the bridegroom, and finally cornered him. At any rate, she kept a watchful eye on him now.

On the way to the church the party came to a river, and an old man stood ready to ferry them across. Suddenly there was a loud cry. The bridegroom had fallen overboard.

"Save him! Save him!" shouted the bride.

"My dear girl," answered her father, "calm yourself; he's an excellent swimmer."

"Yes, of course he is," she replied, her voice growing louder and louder, "and—look! He's swimming hard away from us!"—London Tit-Bits.

Wind and Sound.

A government scientist gives an interesting explanation of the action of the wind in preventing the spread of sound.

It is, he claims, not the wind, as such, that prevents sound from traveling against it, but difference in the strength of the wind. If, for instance, the wind is stronger above than below, or stronger at one side, its effect will be to tilt the sound waves in one direction or another. Differences of temperature in the air also cause deflection of the waves of sound. Other atmospheric causes exist which deflect sound from a straight course and prevent it from going as far in a certain direction as it may have been expected to go.

Some of the sirens in this country, it appears, produce sounds which ought theoretically to be audible at a distance of 1,500 miles, but, in fact, the authorities are satisfied if they are heard only two miles away. The reason for the discrepancy between calculation and experiment was probably atmospheric deflection of the sound.

Maybe "Grace" Widow.

Divorced women, or those who are separated from their husbands, are called "grass widows." It is said that this originated from an English rural term, "grass mare," meaning a horse that has been turned out to pasture.

Some claim that it is derived from "grace widow," meaning that the woman is a widow by courtesy of law or agreement but not by the death of her husband.

The expression was first used in this country in 1849 when so many men went to California at the time of the gold strike and left their wives at home.

PHONE WORKED TOO WELL

New York Police at First Distrusted Important Message That Came From St. Louis.

The telephone has frequently played its part in catching thieves, but here's a case in which it was almost instrumental in letting a man accused of embezzlement go unmolested—and all because it did its work so well!

The telephone in the New York detective headquarters rang one morning recently and a voice said, "This is Detective Aylward of St. Louis, speaking." The voice asked the arrest of a certain man who had gone to one of the New York hotels, and that he be held for further instructions.

So clear was the tone as the man made his request that the police were at first in doubt as to whether the call could have come all the way from St. Louis and were inclined to the theory that they were being hoaxed by some New York practical joker. However, detectives were sent out to make a tour of the hotels of the city, and in the meantime further particulars arrived from St. Louis.

The man was finally located and when arrested had in his possession $13,000, according to the police. The charge against him in St. Louis was the embezzlement of $14,000 and receiving stolen property.

PISTACHE TREES IN AMERICA

Experiment of Government Plant Bureau Seems Likely to Prove a Complete Success.

Pistache nuts, which are familiar to us chiefly in confectionery and as a source of flavorings, are now produced in considerable quantities in the United States.

The largest and sturdiest trees that grow in the deserts of the old world—the Sahara, the arid slopes of the Euphrates valley in Asia Minor, and the dry wastes of Beluchistan and Persia—are wild pistaches. This fact suggested to the United States government plant bureau the idea of introducing the pistache into our own Southwest. Seedlings, grown in its experimental garden at Chico, Cal., have been distributed by thousands to fruit growers in California, Texas, Utah and elsewhere.

Seeds from old-world desert trees were obtained to furnish drought-resisting stocks; and, for grafting and budding the best varieties were brought from Sicily, where the finest cultivated pistache nuts are produced. Also superior varieties were imported from Asia Minor, where pistaches are commonly eaten roasted and salted, like peanuts.

Find Gold Under Fossils.

In Alaska the bones, and often the entire bodies, of extinct animals, such as the mammoth, the mastodon, the reindeer and the bison, are found most abundantly in the layers of soil directly above the gold-bearing gravels. So intimate is this association between fossil animal remains and the auriferous deposits that many explorers who have visited Alaska say that the fossils serve the prospectors as indexes of the metallic richness of the soil.

In ancient times both the gold and the bones and bodies of the animals were deposited at the bottom of valleys by the action of rivers and smaller streams, many of which have now disappeared. Consequently, the appearance of fossils is an almost certain indication that gold will be found in the neighborhood. The cabins of many miners are ornamented with huge tusks and antlers, unearthed in the diggings.

True Thrift.

While it is true that thrift is not miserliness and that parsimony does not bring happiness or upbuilding, it cannot be disputed that judicious saving forms the only basis of economic progress and lasting happiness. Thoughtless spending may bring transitory joy, but such practices also come accompanied by the torture of worry and the more tangible realities of poverty. Also the question must be viewed from the standpoint of social progress.

We must not live for self alone. Our duty must run further than self-pleasure and individual happiness. We must be constructive, not only because it is better for us, but also because it is better for all mankind. Let us be extremely careful in discouraging practices of thrift, even though it may seem that the individual is denied certain ephemeral and fictitious pleasures.—Thrift Magazine.

There's Stock and Stock.

A man who bore the air of a cattleman entered the office of a western public utility company and made inquiry about the company's plan of selling its securities direct to its customers.

He listened for a while and rolled a generous chew of tobacco around and then hit the cuspidor ten feet away without an effort.

"Wal, Pardner," he began, "that ere stock what you sell don't eat, don't drink and don't take up no room. It's a d—n sight surer than my stock right now. Guess I'll just corral some of your stock right now and stop worrying."

Juvenile Biologist.

Georgie—Ma, if the baby was to eat tadpoles would they give him a big bass voice like a frog?

Mother—Good gracious, no! They'd kill him!

"Well, they didn't!"

Famous Nuremburg Bible.

Following the discovery of copperplate engraving we have the printing of the Gutenberg Bible, said by some authorities to be the first use of movable type. Soon Savonarola is distributing his sermons in pamphlet form among the people. Kobruger has "perfected" the press. "Perfected up" books are being published. A rich doctor of Rome is successfully experimenting with type, when appears the Chronicle at the Nuremburg press. (Columbus has found the New world.) At this press Durer is apprenticed to Wolgemuth, and, together with Pleydendorf, they compose the art staff of the Chronicle. And they make the type.

This publication is to appear yearly. Some copies are to be bound, but for the most part it is to be issued as a newspaper. It is the first printed newspaper in the world—or did China have one? Printing was first used there in 202 B. C., but the secret never got out—China had a wall. Besides, she wasn't even mentioned in Europe till a missionary carried the "word." This was about the middle of the Thirteenth century.—Exchange.

Old Newspaper a Live Wire.

The Nuremburg Chronicle (1428) as a newspaper, established a precedent which holds today. It had a section devoted to book reviews; it ran pictures of the prominent men of the day and age; it flayed the "hectic;" it published pictures of women—and saints, and Carlyle said of it that it contained more real information than any one thing he had ever got hold of. It featured pictures of the principal cities, along with articles calculated to boost their special advantages. And if any picture was not forthcoming in the mad rush for its yearly issuance, the printers ran what they had and captioned it to suit the occasion.

PRAISE FOR CHINESE POETS

According to Witter Bynner, Writers of That Land Are "Masters of Momentous Minutes."

"To understand the circumstances of mortality," says a writer in the Nation, "to know what such a being as man can expect, and then to contemplate such knowledge—that is as near as art can get to any steadiness of joy." And that is where T'ang poetry had arrived a thousand years ago, according to Witter Bynner, writing of Chinese poetry in Asia Magazine.

The T'ang poets do not fool themselves with illusion, but, seeing things as they are, find beauty in them—and thereby bring the high, the deep, the everlasting into simple, easy touch with the immediate.

They are masters of momentous minutiae, the small things that make the big. They know and record the immense patience of beauty. There is sadness in that patience, but it is an honest, a hearty and even relishable sadness.

One feels that they had sent their souls out through all the intricacies that are now consuming this Western generation, through all the ways of experience and imagination, and had then recalled them to the pure elemental truths, had received them again, peacefully cleansed of illusion and restlessness, and content, in the final simple beauty of their own dooryards. To be sure, they knew where to place their dooryards. But so might we all, if we would.

LINGUISTS UPSET OLD IDEA

Fond Belief Long Held by Young Mothers Would Seem to Be Without Foundation.

It is commonly believed that a baby, when growing up and learning to talk, speaks the words "ma" and "da" through constantly hearing these uttered by others. This idea, however, is upset by certain students of languages, who advance a totally different theory.

In most languages, "ma" is generally the first syllable spoken by a child, according to linguists. It is the root of the word "mother." As a baby opens its mouth and then exhales breath it is quite possible that it makes this exclamation unconsciously.

Some persons believe that there is no such thing as a "natural" tongue to the world; for, they say, if all babies over one year old were caused to become deaf and dumb, they would be obliged to go through the identical slow process of inventing and evolving a tongue as man was compelled to do in days gone by.

An ancient king of Egypt, Psammetticus, placed two children among a herd of goats on one occasion. They were never allowed to hear a human voice, yet, after two years, the children were able to say the word "bekos," which meant bread. The king's conclusion, naturally, was that his people were the first in the world and their tongue the only true one.

TIME'S CHANGES IN ARCTIC

Fossil Plants Prove That the Region Once Was Mild and in All Probability Frostless.

The ancient vegetation of the Arctic region, as is shown by a study of its fossil plants, indicates that its climate was once very unlike that which prevails there now. Instead of consisting of a handful of small plants struggling for life amid snow and ice in a scant, almost perpetually frozen soil, its vegetation was abundant and luxuriant, and included ferns and palmlike plants, that grow only in a mild and probably frostless climate. This vegetation flourished in the Arctic region from at least late Paleozoic to middle Cenozoic geological time, millions of years before man existed. Although these lands are now so inhospitable and are rarely visited, the United States geological survey has gathered a large amount of information concerning their fossil floras.

A study of the coal beds of the Cape Lisburne region has incidentally disclosed many fossil plants. These coal beds are extensive and are the only known commercially valuable mineral resources of that region. A little coal is occasionally mined for vessels that are short of fuel, which, as there is no harbor, lie offshore and perilously load on a few sacks of coal by means of lighters.

Fuel From House Refuse.

The annual production of Great Britain's house refuse, which amounts to some 10,000,000 tons, could be made to yield 3,000,000 tons of fuel without touching its three to four million tons fertilizer content, J. A. Priestly, president of the London conference of the Institute of Clearing Superintendents, declares. He also states the fuel content represents approximately one-tenth of the annual domestic coal consumption of the country and even taking into full consideration its comparatively small calorific value, the saving to the nation from its utilization would be enormous. This system of recovery of fuel in domestic refuse is no longer an experiment, he says, and is practical for universal adoption except for conflict with vested interests.

Nature's Color Wonders.

A worthy companion of the red maple for fall effects is the red oak, that tall, oval-headed symmetrical tree whose dark green foliage gradually turns a deep red late in the season, says American Forestry Magazine. Ordinarily the turning leaves hold on for two or three weeks, and their rich dark red makes a magnificent show, especially if contrasted with yellow foliaged trees. If planted with evergreens other and brighter colored trees should be used with them. Their coloring is magnificent, but needs the yellows to give it its true value.

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. 5. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, January 5, 1922 No. 38

Social Stunts

It is too bad the entire Hill Top did not witness the play of their child author, Margaret Elsey. A play full of pathos and humor, seizing the audience one moment by the throat, making it hard for them to swallow; then again causing them to smile through unshed tears, leaving in their heart a feeling of both sorrow and happiness. The Queen Esther Circle and the young men that assisted Miss Elsey by their co-operation and splendid ability helped to make the play a real success.

The Glenwood Home Missionary Society gave an informal reception Wednesday evening, December 28th, in the church auditorium for their pastor's daughter, Nona Stimmel, who is a teacher in Mitchell Home, Mizenheimer, S. C. Miss Stimmel gave a very interesting talk about the school and her work there. All enjoyed the delightful social hour which followed. Refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mesdames Lowrie, Hartrough, Burkett and Mayer.

Mrs. H. G. Hamilton, 59 North Ogden Ave., assisted by Mesdames Boyd, Koch, Ison and Miss Ruth Hoffines, will entertain the J. R. B. Sunday School class, of Glenwood Ave. M. E. Church, at Mrs. Hamilton's home on Tuesday evening, January 10, 1922.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Keller, 169 N. Harris Ave., entertained to dinner Tuesday evening, honoring a cousin, Mr. Harry Thomas, of Fon Du Lac, Wis. Covers were laid for eight persons.

Florence M. Latscha and Fred B. Schmidt were united in marriage on Saturday evening, Dec. 31st, at the home of the bride, at 88 Hinman Ave. Rev. J. M. Wenrich, pastor of the Hilltop English Lutheran Church, officiated.

Miss Mildred Phalor, after spending the past two weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Phalor, has returned to Oxford, O., where she will resume her studies at Miami University.

Early Astronomical Instruments.

The earliest known astronomical instruments of German make have recently been described by Dr. J. Hartman of Gottingen. They belonged to the philosopher and astronomer, Cardinal Nikolaus of Cusa, who lived from 1401 to 1464, and comprised a "torquetum," for measuring the longitude and latitude of the celestial bodies, an astrolabe and two celestial globes.

A note has been found in the cardinal's own handwriting, stating that he purchased three of these instruments in the year 1444, together with 16 astronomical treatises, for the sum of 58 florins. Doctor Hartman believes that at least two of the instruments were made by one Nikolaus Hybech of Erfurt, who was born in 1370.

"Musical Calls" of Birds.

It is strange that ornithologists and musicians who give such credit to the rooster, Bob White and whippoorwill do not include among highly distinctive bird calls those of the crow, cardinal and catbird, for while most ordinary persons cannot identify the calls of the robin, wren, bluebird, finch, bunting and the like, it is not to be believed that anybody, once having heard the "caw" of a crow, the "a-n-a-k-e" of the catbird and the "chuck-chuck-chuck," followed by a long clear whistle which the cardinal gives out, could ever fail thereafter to recognize these calls. But it may be that those calls do not fall within the classification of what is said to be the "musical calls."

A SAD ENDING

'Twas a week after Christmas, the high-time of Yule,
The kids of the household had hiked off to school,
But 3-year-old baby had left mother's lap—

The "dame" of the household ('twas cruel to see),
Came in and took a "once-over" at me;
Then off came my strands of silver and gold,
And my tinseled rings and icicles cold.

Next came the light bulbs, with colors sublime,
To go to the attic till next Christmas time;
While the cotton, and frosting so gloriously bright
After leaving my base, caused a miserable sight.

But "the worst is to come"—I fell on the floor,
She cruelly dragged me out the back door,
To the back-yard fence, as far as could be—
Well, that is the end of the Christmas tree.

—Top O'Hill.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Frickert will be grieved to learn of the death of their six-year-old son, Richard, which occurred December 17 at the home of his parents, in Los Angeles, Cal. Only slightly ill with a sore throat for two days, he was thought to be much better, when an attack of croup brought on his death in a few hours. Besides his father and mother, Richard leaves two brothers, Joe and Elmer, and one sister, Betty Jane.

Mr. and Mrs. Frickert were residents of the Hilltop, living on S. Harris Ave. until a year ago, when they moved to their Western home.

Hilltop Athletic Club Elects Officers for Ensuing Year

At the annual meeting of the club, held last Friday evening, the following officers were elected, and will be installed on Friday evening, January 13, at a special called meeting: C. E. Helmbrecht, president; R. S. Fairchilds, vice president; E. J. Drye, secretary and treasurer. The Board of Governors consists of W. L. Millikin, Jean W. Worrel, W. E. Dolby, and Custodian Brown Turner.

At this meeting plans were matiate and a committee was appointed to report at the next meeting for an Athletic Club Home, the first of its kind west of the river. The Hilltop club support such a proposition, and it will provide a place for the entertainment of the growing generation on the Hilltop and keep them off the streets and out of mischief. What more could be done by the men of the Hilltop for the sake of the young men, as well as provide a place of entertainment and amusement for all?

The home talked of will have bowling alleys, swimming pool, shower baths, library, and a gymnasium floor large enough to hold all sorts of indoor sports, such as basket ball, volley ball, indoor base ball and other athletics of this nature. It will be a great thing for this good old Tilltop, the best place to live, after all.

Think it over and let us have your application for membership and be with us when we have our housewarming before long.

During these days when so many are out of work, why not those of us who are employed seek out all we possibly can find of odd jobs about the house or store and let someone out of work do them. It might only be a few hours or a day or so, but that would help someone. To this end, during January, February and March, anyone having a small job of any kind which they wish to let someone do, if you will make known same in the columns of the Record we will publish the fact free of charge, and thus try and put you in touch with a man or woman for the job. Likewise, anyone out of work and wanting odd jobs, tell us and we will also make known your wants by trying to introduce you to some odd job.

The Hilltop Branch of the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank had opened up 928 Christmas Club accounts on Tuesday's close of business. This is over 50 per cent. more than last year. The books are still open for entries in the club.

The S. P. I. class will be entertained at the home of Edith Smith, 2402½ W. Broad St., Monday evening, January 9th. Miss Virgie Carter will be the assisting hostess.

WAS NOT HIS LUCKY DAY

Trolley Car Patron Got Into Trouble When He Attempted to Get Away With Umbrella.

Young Bob McIntosh had always prided himself on his honesty and uprightness, but it was a rainy night when he saw an umbrella apparently deserted on a seat in the trolley car. He picked it [illegible] It was [illegible] to and the home of young Bob McIntosh was a good four blocks in the pouring rain.

As the car neared the street, says the New York Sun, the honest young man looked around and seeing that none of his fellow passengers was noticing him he picked up the umbrella and walked up to the motorman's platform. There with the giltness of one with a guilty conscience he conversed with the pilot until the car drew up at his street.

"Well, good night!" said young Bob McIntosh as he lightly stepped from the car and raised his umbrella.

"Good night" quoth the motorman, but as Bob made his way across puddles to the curb he noticed that the car had not continued on its way; indeed, even the door had not yet been closed. He had started down the street to his home when a mighty "Hey!" made him turn.

"How far are you goin' to go with that umbrella, young man?" shouted the motorman. "This time it happened to be mine," said that worthy as he slammed the door shut and shot the car forward.

ADAM AND EVE GO SHOPPING

Writer Has Drawn Liberally on His Imagination in Describing Remarkable Excursion.

Let us imagine our scapegoat ancestors attempting an eleven-o'clock stroll through Drang's ten-story department store. Can we not hear the tense ejaculations of our first mother before the mountains of unknown things, wools, satins, silks, challies, organdies and muslins, piled ceiling high before her? Even Adam, who has a reputation as a namer of things, might well drop all his Miltonic airs of superiority, and say for once in some dainty form of Edenic language, "Eve, dear, I certainly am out of soundings. I can find names easily enough for birds, beasts and fishes, but all this" (with a gesture of meek hopelessness) "is out of my zone. Yet I am sure it is all intended for your sex; for I'm thinking no man would gear himself up in any of this—duffle"—if one may help him to a word.

Then Eve, if true to her old Edenic form, would retort:

"But Adam, dear, you can't deny that it is all most tempting, and I am going to pick out right away some of that soft cloudy stuff, the color of a sunrise; I'm sure it would be much prettier than fig leaves for a dress."—North American Review.

There's a Difference.

Few people of the United States can play games. Many can contest a game for the satisfaction of beating an adversary, or to get exercise, but actually to play a game is a different matter. Sporting editors, judging by their writings, must be the most serious of men, and their earnestness is often amusing. The defeat of a college football team recently called forth a lugubrious utterance from a correspondent who evidently felt that the educational institution had received a blow from which its scholastic reputation of a century and a half would hardly be able to save it. The writer asserted that the football trainers of this institution were paid insufficiently, and, after taking the authorities to task, reached his climax in these significant words: "A young, inexperienced coach has been asked to assume the responsibility of the team, who could be hired at a salary no greater than the average professor in the college receives." In the present state of American school athletic affairs this might be considered an extremely high compliment.—Christian Science Monitor.

When the World Is Filled.

A member of the Royal Geographic society in England estimates that the fertile lands of the globe amount to 28,000,000 square miles, the steppes to 14,000,000, and the deserts to 1,000,000. Fixing 207 persons to the square mile for fertile lands, ten for steppes and one for deserts as the greatest population that the earth could properly nourish, he arrives at the conclusion that when the number of inhabitants reaches about 6,000,000,000 our planet will be peopled to its full capacity.

If the rate of increase shown by recent census statistics should be uniformly maintained, it is shown that the globe would be fully peopled about the year 2072. But such calculations do not allow for unknown sources of error, and therefore cannot be taken too literally.

His Different Nature.

"My brother," said the solemn person, "are you so living in this world that you will wear a golden crown in the hereafter?"

"I'm trying to," said Mr. Peckton "but I never could wear a fancy clothi hat without feeling dreadfully conspicuous and uncomfortable. If I should win a golden crown I'm afraid I never would get used to it."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Selects Strange Home.

No bird selects stranger places for a home than the house wren, the flighty, fidgety, fussy little midget of a bird that carols all day and would fight a turkey buzzard or any other thing that flies. The biological survey of the Department of Agriculture says: "Probably no bird displays greater eccentricity in the selection of a nesting place than the house wren." A hollow branch or a knothole in a post or stump are his more prosaic choices. When more esthetically inclined he affects old boots and hats hung up to scare robbins from the cherries, or takes an old copper pot or tomato can lying on the roof of a back shed; or if the gardner hangs his coat on the fence when warm weather begins and forgets it for a few days, he may find when he returns that an enterprising wren has preempted one of his pockets and has his domestic affairs under full headway.

Demon Was Cuttlefish.

For many centuries Norway has had its legends telling frightful deeds of the kraken, a great and mysterious marine creature that was a danger to sailors on the high seas. Now scientists have found that the localities in which these folk-tales flourish are the habitat of giant squids or "cuttlefish," of the genus Architeuthus, that have frequently been cast up upon sea beaches. According to Dr. James Ritchie of the Royal Scottish museum, the largest of these on record had tentacles with a span close to 30 feet. It was nine feet nine inches long from the tip of its tail to to tip of its short arms, but its tentacular arms were each 14 feet long.—New York Evening Post.

For Living Game.

Hunting and its attendant outdoor life appeals to all sportsmen and is the motive for a great use of the forest lands for that type of recreation. But there is another feature perhaps little thought of, but none the less present and important in the simple presence of living game in the landscape, and there is little question but that the value of a live animal viewed by forest visitors several times during its life, has a greater aggregate worth in the recreation scheme than the same animal dead.—American Forestry Magazine.

COUNTY FAIR IN "BIG TOWN"

How New York City Cousin Won the Day Over Boy From the Farm.

The country boy had been visiting his city cousin for a week and was about to return to the rural districts, says the New York Sun. The city cousin had shown the country boy all the sights—Broadway and Times square, the parks, the zoo, the subways and about all the other things which the out-of-town boy would be interested in. During the last few days of the stay in the city of the country boy the two were comparing the rural districts and the big town.

"You know," said the city cousin proudly, "one can buy anything in this town that is grown, manufactured or produced in any part of the world. All you need is the money and some one here will surely have to sell what you want."

"Well, there's one thing that you don't have here and can't duplicate that we have," returned the country boy, "and I've missed it while I've been in town."

"Why, what's that?" asked his cousin, who had tried valiantly to amuse his relative from the country.

"The county fair," triumphantly answered the one from the outlying districts. For a few moments the city cousin was stumped. He didn't answer, while his relative went on to relate the splendors of the fairs. Suddenly he grabbed his country relative's arm and virtually dragged him into a subway. A downtown express sped them toward Fourteenth street. Here they alighted and walked up into Union square.

With a smile of triumph the city cousin led his rural relative into one of the "dime museums" along Fourteenth street and said: "Here you are! Shooting galleries, calliope music, fortune tellers, pictures of Salome dancers and everything you want, and it only costs a cent to try them out. Go to it! We've got everything in this town you have—and more!"

PUTS LIARS IN TWO CLASSES

Writer in Leslie's Asserts That One Talks Loudly and the Other Is Almost Inaudible.

When a man, ordinarily truthful, is lying, to shield some one else, he feels so ashamed of himself that he talks in an unnaturally low tone of voice. You ask him to speak louder, and he does so for a moment, showing that the trouble does not rest his vocal powers, but a few seconds later he relapses into tones almost inaudible. He feels that he has to tell the lie, but he doesn't want anybody to hear him. This habit of talking almost in a whisper is characteristic of panhandlers on the street—telling an obviously concocted hard-luck story as a means of getting money, writes Fred C. Kelly, in Leslie's.

Sometimes, on the other hand, the liar takes exactly the opposite tack, and talks unnaturally loud—to hide the fact that he really desires to talk low. Another frequent mannerism of the liar who is ashamed or embarrassed, is a disposition unconsciously to keep his hand over his mouth, or make a frequent protective gesture of the hand in front of his face—because he would really like to shut out the rest of the world and do his enforced lying where nobody could hear or see him.

How Cedar Chests Protect.

It is the pleasant aroma that does the trick of protecting wool clothing from moths. Young moth worms simply cannot stand the smell of red cedar. They die and do not get a chance to feed on your best suit. Grandmother knew cedar chests were moth preventers, but it took Department of Agriculture experts to prove just how the red cedar moth defense operates. The adult or moth miller, its eggs, and the pupae do not mind cedar. The worms or larvae, which do the wool eating, and which develop into pupae after a satisfying wool feed, are killed shortly after hatching by the odor of cedar that fills a tightly closed cedar chest. But, say the moth fighting experts, two or three pounds of unpleasant smelling napthalene, or moth balls, placed in just an ordinary chest, protect clothing just as well.

When?

A shrewd old gentleman described an acquaintance as being "so busy with his good intentions that he never had time to carry out any of them." Most of us have met that "acquaintance." There are persons who have no suspicion of their own selfishness and uselessness in the world, their good intentions have completely blinded them to their lack of action. They dream magnificent dreams of the good that might be accomplished—if only conditions were a little different. They openly count the efforts and the benefactions around them as scarcely worth while, when so much more might be accomplished if only individuals and society were in better shape.

COAL SAVINGS CLUB

A Rare Opportunity

Through the combined efforts of the Hilltop Branch of The Citizens Trust & Savings Bank and The West Side Lumber Co. at Camp Chase, O., the following plan is submitted to the users of Coal on the Hilltop:

A most pleasant feeling of independence will be yours if you but join our Coal Savings Club

Here is the Plan

You pay into the Hilltop Bank for twenty-five weeks, or from February 9th to July 29th, 1922. At the expiration of that time your coal bin is filled, in accordance with the contract, by The West Side Lumber Co. Upon your signature that the coal has been received in good condition, and as specified in the contract, "the Bank" pays the "Lumber Co." in full from your coal savings account. In case your order should be decreased, or the price of coal should drop, the difference would be immediately refunded you.

A new and novel savings club is offered the Hilltop people by the West Side Lumber Co. and their depository, the Hilltop Branch Columbia Trust and Savings Bank. It is called the Coal Savings Club—a plan whereby one can eliminate all coal worries and be insured their winter's supply of coal, to be delivered in August, when coal prices are at their lowest. This is a plan along the lines of the Christmas Savings Club. A certain sum due each week, depending on the size of the coal order. We thoroughly believe that from the favorable comment received from all over the Hilltop favoring the plans as submitted in last week's Record, this plan will be very popular.

As these firms are branches of two of the largest concerns in Columbus, everyone is assured of the best of service and fair dealing. As coal will undoubtedly be cheaper in August, a refund check from these firms will help to pay your taxes. A telephone call to either of these firms will bring a representative to your door to explain the workings of the club.

The Record believes this plan has never before been offered to consumers of coal in this part of the country, and recommends the Coal Savings Club to all of its readers.

PUBLISHER.

Obituary

John Lisle Shrum was born in Franklin county, Ohio, September 20, 1846. He was the son of Samuel and Chloe Shrum and was one of a family of seven children all of whom are now deceased. January 1, 1872, he was united in marriage with Margaret Hodgison and for fifty years and a day they lived together and worked together, and shared toils and trials and triumphs of life. The five children who came to their home are all living and they reside in Columbus and vicinity. They are as follows: Oliver and Ray, Grace, Elva, and Mrs. O. L. Thompson. There are also six grand-children who survive him.

Mr. Shrum lived at the old homestead west of Columbus for 67 years. For the last eight years he has resided in Columbus.

He had been in declining health for about ten years. The disease that caused his death slowly but surely, preyed upon his system sapping his strength and vitality. He grew gradually weaker until the evening of January 2, 1922, the parting of the day when the shadows fall and the busy world is hushed, when he ceased to breathe and his soul departed.

He has gone to the other side of the stream that glides by this earthly shore. He has passed over the unseen line to the Land of Immortal Love—God's country and ours.

While we sigh for the touch of a vanished hand we must not think of him as dead, for one we have loved we never lose. True love never forgets. True faith looks into the dim unknown and keeps its hold upon the one whose voice is stilled.

To live is Christ, to die is gain. The angel of Death is the Messenger of God come to lead the way into the Life Abundant.

Funeral services were held at Wesley Chapel Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 4, conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. T. Stimmel, and interment was made in the Norwich Township Cemetery.

The call of the Father has again entered our Chapter, and severed our Golden chain in taking our beloved Sister Blanche Turner to that home not made with hands. We extend our deepest love and sympathy for those that have felt this loss most keenly, and assure them, he that giveth life also taketh it away, but promises that whosoever liveth and believeth in him shall have everlasting life. We all know that our Sister was a good, kind Christian wife and mother, and the parting will be only temporary and the meeting eternal.
God bless you: So I breathe a charm
Lest grief's dark night oppress you.
Then how can sorrow bring you harm
It 'tis God's way to bless you,
And so, not "all thy days be fair
And shodaws touch thee never,"
But this alone—God bless you
So thou art safe forever.

Committee: Iva Tracy, W. D. Hughes, C. V. Williams.

groceries, is quite a pure article, of a dingy, grayish-white color, and a slightly alkaline and hardly agreeable taste. In cooking that alkalinity and acridity are mostly driven out. In its fresh form it is in shape elongated like a giant plantain, and for drying and conversion into flour is cut down before ripening so that it has, like a green banana, not a semblance of sweetness. But the same fruit, allowed to ripen fully, then sun dried, becomes almost as sweet as a Smyrna fig. This tree-grown cake bread is eaten dried thus, and along with the tree-growing flour forms the chief food for millions in the tropics.—New York Herald.

A Covert Thrust.

The following double-meaning poem is attributed to Dean Swift. Read the lines first as they are printed; then read them as they are numbered.

1—The pomp of courts and pride of
2—
3—I prize above all earthly things
5—I love my country, but my king
7—Above all men his praise I'll sing
9—The royal banners are displayed
11—And may success the standard aid
2—I fain would banish far from 4—
4—The Rights of Man and Common
6—Sense
6—Destruction to that odious name
8—The plague of Princes, Thomas
8—Paine
10—Defeat and ruin seize the cause
12—Of France, her liberty, and her
12—laws.

Odd-Mannered Flower.

Perhaps the witch-hazel thinks its simple little yellow blossoms would not compare favorably with the gorgeousness of fall chrysanthemums—perhaps it wants to be original—at all events, not until "mums" and other varieties of autumn flowers are gone, and even the leaves of the witch-hazel itself have fallen, do the witch-hazel flowers appear.

Very late in October, or more likely in November, you will find the cheerful little yellow blossoms growing right beside the last year's seed pods. These little urn-shaped seed pods split when frost comes, and the four seeds contained in each pod hop out onto the ground, where they will take root and grow in the spring.—Christian Science Monitor.

Mistletoe Brains.

One of the most curious illustrations of the working of intelligence in plants is offered by the mistletoe, whose sticky berry, finding lodgment on a tree branch, throws out a tiny rootlet, which tries to pierce the bark and thus obtain a rootheld. If the bark is too tough, the rootlet swings the berry over to a fresh spot, and makes another trial. In this way such a berry has been known to make five jumps in two nights and three days. On one occasion a number of them were discovered by a botanist in the act of vainly journeying along a telegraph wire, trying to find a place to grow.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Conservation of Vanishing Species.

It is urged upon all biologists to exert a more serious effort to rescue a few fragments of vanishing nature, including all forms. It is pointed out, through the medium of Science, that the appalling rate at which our native flora and fauna are disappearing is obvious to all except those workers whose outlook is bounded by the walls of their laboratories, and that the situation is accepted by these latter as more or less inevitable. That biologists, above all others, are in a position to "appreciate the loss of a single species or of natural associations of species" is patent. They are, furthermore, in an advantageous position to bring out by propaganda and with the weight of authoritative counsel the value of this conservation. Toward the furtherance of this end a national organization has been proposed.—Scientific American.

What Quarter Sawed Is.

In some woods, notably the oaks, a figure is produced by quarter-sawing, says the American Forestry Magazine. In practically all woods there are ribbons of tissue which run at right angles to the axis of the tree like spokes in a wheel. These are the rays, often called medullary or pith rays because some of them appear as extensions of the pith into the wood. In all the conifers and most hardwoods these rays are too fine to show distinctly. In others, as in maple, cherry and mahogany, they are distinct but not conspicuous.

MIRRORS FROM PLATE GLASS

Process Is a Somewhat Complicated One and Calls for a High Degree of Skill.

Mirrors are made from plate glass. The proper ingredients are mixed together and melted in large pots. The molten mass is then poured out on great iron tables and a heavy roller flattens out the glass to the desired thickness. The sheets are then annealed, which consists of heating them slowly in various chambers kept at different temperatures. This is for the purpose of relieving unnatural strain in the formed glass, which makes it extremely brittle, so that a mere touch is sometimes sufficient to cause the plate to break. After the glass has been cut to the proper size the sheets are polished by rubbing over the surface pads or small disks until the finished product is about half the thickness of the original. The glass is then ready to be used for show windows, or can be made into mirrors.

The back of the sheet of plate glass is "silvered." In the early processes this did not mean what the word indicates, for no silver was used, but a mixture of tin and mercury. The high cost of mercury and the danger of mercurial poisoning brought about its replacement by silver, which is used in the form of lunar caustic. While silver is an expensive metal, the amount required to coat even a large mirror is so small that the cost is of no moment.

UNIVERSAL FOOD IN TROPICS

It is of interest to note the flour and biscuit of the tropics. There are a dozen different bread fruit trees scattered throughout tropical regions. ## WHERE FOX SHOWS CUNNING

Reynard Always Refuses to Run Faster Than the Dog Will Drive Him, for a Purpose.

An Englishman who had once seen an American fox running before a hound wrote that the American fox is much slower than its English cousin. As a matter of fact, the Englishman's assertion, which by the way appeared in an encyclopaedia, is really a tribute to the superior cunning of the American fox. Reynard, says Mr. Charles D. Stewart in the Atlantic Monthly, could have run a good deal faster had he thought it wise to do it.

A fox surprised by a hound in a small patch of wood will run across the open at astonishing speed. Then he not only will slow up but may even sit down on some convenient elevation and look back. He keeps his wits about him; he wants to see what is going on. When the hound has struck his stride the fox will soon gauge it and lead him a chase. Anyone who sees the chase and knows that the hound is slow becomes an admirer of the witty Reynard and will be likely to say that the fox is running slowly just to tease the dog. Indeed, many entertaining writers have said so; but a veteran hunter would not so interpret the action of the fox. He well knows that when a fox gets half a mile or so ahead of him and skulks along at a set distance out of sight, it is not doing it to tease him. The fox is not so human as that. The plain fact is that the fox will not retreat before a dog any faster than the dog drives him. That is because it is naturally cunning.

HOW RUSKIN PAINTED PINE

English Writer Quick to Perceive the Rugged Beauty of the Northern Forest Monarch.

The impressions on most people's minds must have been received more from pictures than reality, so far as I can judge; so ragged they think the pine; whereas its chief character is green and full roundness. It stands compact, like one of its own cones, slightly curved on its sides, finished and quaint as a carved tree in some Elizabethan garden; and instead of being wild in expression, forms the softest of all forest scenery; for other trees show their trunks and twisting boughs; but the pine, growing either in luxuriant mass or in happy isolation, allows no branch to be seen. Summit behind summit rise its pyramidal ranges, or down to the very grass sweep the circlets of its boughs; so that there is nothing but green cone and green carpet. Nor is it only softer, but in one sense more cheerful than other foliage; for it casts only a pyramidal shadow. Lowland forest arches overhead, and cheques the ground with darkness; but the pine, growing in scattered groups, leaves the glades between emerald bright. —"Modern Painters," John Ruskin.

Valuable Cow.

Some years ago the last remaining farmer in a prosperous New York suburb bequeathed to his son his only property, 16 acres of land, a ramshackle barn and one cow. The young recipient had no money to develop the land, and was at a loss to know what to do with his cow, whose habits he did not understand. He finally decided to keep her as a remembrance of his father, and she grazed away contentedly.

Ten years later there came an opportunity to dispose of the land at $1,000 a lot, or $192,000 for the whole. Based on this valuation, the taxes during the ten years would have amounted to something like $15,000, whereas, because of the cow, the property had been given a farm classification, and had been taxed during the period only $1,800.—Wall Street Journal.

The Cure.

A very little girl sat on the plush couch in the hotel lobby violently swinging her feet. Back and forth they swung with vigor. A nice-faced lady sat down next to the child and watched her for a moment. Then she asked very gently why the little girl didn't put her feet on the floor.

With painstaking care and patience the little girl explained by gestures that if she held her feet on the floor she couldn't sit on the couch, and if she sat back comfortably her feet didn't reach the floor.

"Dear me," said the lady, very kindly, "what are you going to do?"

When One Is Rich.

Possessions are synonymous with riches. One is rich who has great possessions. But possessions are many and varied. A person may have much money, and be very poor. A person may have little of the goods of this world and yet be rich. Possessions are both material and spiritual. Material riches of themselves can do little. No matter how much money a person has, that money alone cannot accomplish much. Money cannot buy love, friendship, mercy. Money cannot give its owner an amiable temperament, literary taste, or moral worth. Money for individuals collectively can accomplish nothing without mind and soul put with that money. Somebody must furnish these spiritual assets.—Grit.

That Word "Pigeon-English."

To the Chinese we owe the compound word, "pigeon-English," the childish dialect in use at Chinese ports between natives and American and English traders.

The Chinese use the word pigeon or "pidgin" to supply the place of English nouns unknown to them. Those ingenious orientals call a concert a "sing-song pidgin" and a conversation a "talkee pidgin."

With the increasing intercourse between the Chinese and English speaking persons, and with the progress of education in China, real English is taking the place of the "pidgin" variety. But "pigeon-English" still survives, especially in fiction and on the stage.

Saved by Mankind.

The gingko tree, which is a native of China, long ago ceased to exist as a "wild" tree. But it has been cultivated in many countries, and is hardy and persistent wherever it is planted in the temperate zone. The gingko is one of the few species that have been saved from extinction by man as an offset to the many species, vegetable and animal, that have been exterminated by him. The gingko flourishes in the northern part of the United States, and is favored for park planting. Because of its unique two-lobed leaves it is sometimes called the "maidenhair tree."

Slam, Bang!

He (walking by a graveyard)—Wouldn't it be terrible if all the dead should come to life again?

The W. H. M. S. of Glenwood Church met at the home of Mrs. L. H. Bellows, 210 S. Warren, January 19, with 21 members and four visitors present. After a short business session, Mrs. Roberts, of Mt. Vernon Ave. Auxiliary, gave a short talk.

A splendid program was rendered, Christian Stewardship being the study for the afternoon, Mrs. R. T. Stimmel leading in the devotions. Miss Rogers, who recently returned from Tucson, Arizona, gave a splendid report of mission work among the Chinese, Indians and Mexicans of the great Southwest. Mrs. R. McCollough, Ohio Conference Secretary of Christian Stewardship, gave a very instructive and helpful talk. Piano solo, "Sweet Bye and Bye," by Lucille Glick. After a few remarks by Rev. Stimmel all were greatly impressed by the demonstration of the tithe.

Light refreshments were served. Group No. 1 prepared the program and acted as hostesses for the afternoon.

New Hilltop Organization

"The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce!". Doesn't that loom up good to you? We think so, too. Well, that's the latest "big doin's" for the Hilltop. Here is how it happened:

Several of our wideawake, energetic business men called a meeting of Hilltop business men for Tuesday night, January 24th, at the store room of the Carlile & Kerr Co., and twenty-three business men responded to the call. A temporary organization was effected and Mr. J. W. Worrell, manager of the Hilltop Branch of the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank, was made chairman. The name of the organization is to be "The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce" and its object is "Boost the Hilltop" in an honorable way anyway we can.

Eligibility for membership will consist of any merchant or business man, in any line of business on the Hilltop, and also any professional man residing on the Hilltop.

A petition for signature for charter members was drawn up and three sets of committees were named to take these petitions to each and every business man on the Hilltop. The names of the members of the committees are:

No. 1—J. W. Baber, R. G. Hauntz, C. E. Helmbrecht.

No. 2—M. W. Seiller, J. M. LaDow, H. R. Gibson.

No. 3—W. R. Watts, S. W. Burke, C. W. Hitch.

One of these three committees will wait upon each business man within the next week and secure his name as a member. Please be ready to meet them and give them your name and thus become a member of what promises to be one of the best civic organizations in Columbus. If you are in business on the Hilltop you certainly cannot afford to miss being a member of this organization. Then be sure and plan to be at the meeting to further organize next Tuesday night, January 31, at the store of Carlile & Kerr Co.

TO THE MOTHERS OF THE HILLTOP

Mothers, who have daughters, I am sure you will take this advice, as I have been taking notice of young girls and boys going to the hill at nights to coast. Girls at the age of 12 and 14 especially need a mother's protection. As I have visited and worked among girls that have gone wrong. We find the jails full and Rescue Homes running over. I just wonder why mothers don't think. If some mothers would visit these places where these girls are, they would stop and take notice. They are some mother's daughters. Just as precious to them as our own, and maybe their mother didn't think. Mothers, protect your children as long as you can, and then if they go wrong it won't be because you didn't care. God have mercy on some mothers. They will be held responsible for their children's sins.

A MOTHER.

An Order for One Wife.

An English traveler and author in northern Waigeria became interested in a Home for Freed Slaves. Women and children were kept in the institution until they could be otherwise disposed of, which was generally by matrimony, in the case of the women when the author acted as a marriage broker. He says: "A Mausea soldier would come to me with a note from his commander certifying him to be a man of good character and able to support a wife or another wife, as the case might be.

"I then turned over a corner of the note and scribbled: 'To Lady Superintendent, Freed Slaves Home: Please let bearer have one wife.'"

BETTER THAN ALL MEDICINE

Oysters Put Artemus Ward on His Feet When Every Other Remedy Had Proved a Failure.

When Artemus Ward and Dr. Hingston, who acted as his manager on his western lecture tour, arrived in Salt Lake City, after that amusing and successful visit to California, the beloved humorist fell sick. So badly was he, after his arduous rounds of the Pacific coast and his strenuous days in Virginia City, Nev., with Mark Twain and Bill Nye, that his life was despaired of.

The lecture Artemus had arranged with Brigham Young to give in the theater, had to be postponed. In fact, so hopeless seemed the case that Dr. Hingston even tried to arrange to have the body of his friend and partner transported to the East on the stage coach. But the optimism of Artemus brought him back to safety again, a very thin and weak man.

But before he was allowed to leave his room, Artemus had difficulty gaining sufficient strength even to walk. From Brigham Young to the least humble of the Mormon "saints," attentions in the form of fresh eggs, jellies and other helpful delicacies were showered upon the convalescent. Artemus enjoyed everything, but nothing seemed to give him strength.

At last a food was discovered in a local grocery, so we are told, that "lifted him from his couch." This was nothing more or less than a dozen cans of Baltimore oysters, put up in squares of block tin. The first oyster stew "hit the spot," and Artemus chirped up:

"Get out the bills for the lecture! See Mr. Clawson and arrange for the date. The show is safe enough, now we've got on an oyster basis."—Mark Stuyvesant in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TO MAKE HEADWAY IN LIFE

Consecrate and Concentrate, Is the Advice Given by Writer in Forbes Magazine.

You want to make headway in the world, of course. See if this thought can help you: First, consecrate yourself to your calling; then concentrate. The lives of most men of notable achievement have been characterized by consecration and concentration. Before one can consecrate oneself, one must be possessed by some bigger and broader and better idea than mere money making. There must be something in the work that appeals to one. The work must appear to be worth while, worth effort and industry and sacrifice. You could not, for example, conceive of anyone consecrating himself to "bootlegging." There isn't one honest calling, however, to which a worker could not consecrate himself or herself if animated by the right spirit. Having consecrated oneself to a line of endeavor, then concentration must follow if proficiency and success are to be attained.

The worker, be he employee or employer, who hasn't consecrated himself to his calling fails to derive from it that deep satisfaction known to those who have consecrated themselves to their jobs. Concentration follows consecration naturally and with joy rather than hard effort.—Forbes Magazine.

Swiss Santa Rings Bell.

In the quaint little town of St. Gallen, Switzerland, which has retained many of its curious medieval customs, Santa Claus makes his visits ringing a gigantic cowbell, says Popular Science Magazine.

In St. Gallen, every Christmas eve twelve men array themselves in white trousers and shirts, embroidered wool suspenders, and bright red ties. Each one fastens an enormous cowbell on to a wide leather belt, and covers his head with an enormous mask of cardboard, the upper part of which is decorated by stenciled designs.

One of the twelve is called "Samichlaus." It is his duty to give the good children presents. The other eleven remain at a little distance on the outskirts of the jolly crowd that follows them on their rounds, giving candy to the grownups and entertaining everybody with their clowning.

Cave-Dwelling Snakes.

Until recent times no reptiles were known to have adapted themselves to existence in the darkness of caverns. Now, however, it is known that in the Malay peninsula a snake, a species of coluber, inhabits certain caverns, feeding upon the bats.

These cave-dwelling snakes attain a length of between eight and nine feet. Their coloring simulates that of the walls of the caverns. The rock is a yellowish limestone, traversed with blackish veins, and these markings and colors are curiously reproduced in the snakes, many of which lurk on the ledge in the semi-darkness near the entrances, watching for the bats.

The Game of Whist.

All great discoveries are works of time, and the game of whist is no exception to the rule. Its merits were not recognized in early times, and under the vulgar appellation of "whist and swobbers" it long lingered in the servants' hall ere it could ascend to the drawing room.

At length some gentlemen in England who met at the Crown coffeehouse in Bedford Rod, studied the game, gave it rules, established its principles, and then Edward Hoyle, in 1743, blazoned it forth to all the world.

Writer Asserts That "Flu" Is Spread by Practice of Doffing the Hat in Salutation.

Influenza has always been widely mysterious in its operations. Long ago one of our warships was off the west African coast, says London Answers, when a dense black mist advanced from the shore and swept over the vessel. All the men on deck at the time were stricken down with the "flu"; and a little later the remainder of the men and officers were attacked.

The ship was at once ordered home, and, though many of the cases were complicated with pneumonia and bronchitis, none, luckily, proved fatal. The patients were treated with cinchona bark and ammonia, which was then a recognized formula for malarial fevers.

During the devastating epidemic of "flu," the Turks in Europe escaped because, it is said, they never removed their turbans. The medical faculty of Vienna officially declared that influenza was largely due to the practice of doffing hats in the streets. In support of this contention, it was pointed out that the great majority of the victims were of the male sex.

A traveler found influenza to be unusually severe in Mexico, where, as he remarked, there is so much hat-doffing.

It may be the case, however, that such a large proportion of males are attacked because of the constant drain on their vitality by the nature of their daily occupation. The writer was recently informed by a high medical authority in London that influenza epidemics of late years showed the principal sufferers to be male persons who had reached the most active years of their lives.

Interesting tests were once made to determine the respective pulling power of horses, men and elephants. Two horses, weighing 1,600 pounds each, together pulled 3,750 pounds, or 550 pounds more than their combined weight. One elephant, weighing 12,000 pounds, pulled 8,750 pounds, or 3,250 pounds less than his weight. Fifty men, aggregating about 7,500 pounds in weight, pulled 8,750 pounds, or just as much as the single elephant. But like the horses, they pulled more than their own weight. One hundred men pulled 12,000 pounds.

GOES BACK TO OLD EGYPT

Legend of Cinderella, Almost Universal, Believed to Have Come From Ancient Memphis.

Cinderella and the legend surrounding her glass slipper is believed to have originally come from ancient Memphis. In the ruins of this buried city lies the pyramid of Rhodopis, who lived at Naucratis, and was incomparably beautiful and chaste. One day when Rhodopis was bathing an eagle flew through the open ceiling of her bathroom and plucked from her maid's hands the sandal which she was just about to lace about her mistress' foot.

The eagle then flew to Memphis, where the king was administering justice in one of the courts of the palace, and, hovering above the king, dropped the sandal, which fell into the folds of the king's garment. He examined the sandal and found it so small and lovely that he bade his servants search all Egypt till they should find the woman whom it would fit.

Rhodopis was found in Naucratis and carried to the king, who married her. She died after a few months' happiness, and the disconsolate king had one of the costliest pyramids of antiquity built in her memory. In the first century B. C. the priests of Memphis were wont to exhibit a sandal in a crystal shrine which, they declared, once belonged to Rhodopis, miraculously preserved through many centuries. The sarcophagus and the mummy of Rhodopis have entirely vanished and her pyramid is little more than a ruin, but her legend lives in every land.

FAMOUS "LION OF LUCERNE"

Thorvaldsen's Masterpiece Commemorates the Heroism of the Swiss Guards in Paris in 1792.

The well-known monument called the "Lion of Lucerne," erected near Lucerne, in 1821, commemorates the tragic fate of the Swiss guards in the French Revolution when in their devotion to duty they were sacrificed to the bullets of the Marseillais and the pikes of the mob, August 10, 1792.

This infantry regiment, the "Gardas Suisses," had been originally a Swiss mercenary regiment in the Wars of Religion; but for their own good conduct at the combat of Arques they were incorporated in the permanent establishment of the Maison du Roi, by Henry IV, (Henry of Navarre), in 1589, and in the guards in 1615. The French guards sided openly with the constitutional movement at the Revolution, and were disbanded, but the Swiss guards remained faithful to their trust.

This monument was the work of Bertel Thorvaldsen. (1770-1844), a Danish sculptor, noted for his statues of Christ and the apostles, and for his efforts at classical sculpture. He was the son of an Icelander who had settled in Denmark, and was born at Copenhagen. There he lies buried under a bed of roses in the courtyard of the museum he endowed.

But Is It Worth It?

This is a remedy of an English woman for taking off superfluous ounces from the face that has become too fat through overeating and lack of exercise.

To begin with, of course, she recommends mild dieting and plenty of walking and lots of water to drink every day. This to cut down superfluous fat all over the body.

One good exercise is this: Open the mouth and work the jaw vigorously, first to the right, then to the left, then backward, then forward. Do this persistently.

Then draw the cheeks in between the teeth and puff them out hard and full. Then, with the teeth shut tight, stroke the cheeks with the palms of the hands gently upward from the chin tip to forehead. Don't do any of the stroking exercises too rapidly or vigorously, but do them for a long time, persistently, slowly. You will get the best results in this way.

American Time Signals Best.

The English freely admit that the system of telegraphic time signals adopted by the naval observatory at Washington is much to be preferred to that in use at Greenwich for supplying Great Britain with standard time.

At Greenwich a signal is sent out at noon, whereas at Washington a series of signals is used, beginning five minutes before noon. During these five minutes every tick of the observatory clock is electrically transmitted, except the twenty-ninth second of each minute, the last five seconds of the first four minutes, and at last ten seconds of the fifth minute. After this final ten seconds break, the noon signal is given. In this manner the middle of each minute is clearly indicated, and yet more clearly the instant of noon. The length of the series facilitates the regulation of clocks and chronometers.

TESTING AIR IN OLD MINE

Of All Methods, the Lowering of a Miner's Safety Lamp Is Acknowledged to Be Safest.

Raising and lowering a bucket several times, to bring into a long-disused mine fresh air from the surface, is common practice. Methane may be expected in abandoned shafts or pits driven in coal measures or carbonaceous slates, or where a heavily timbered shaft is partly filled with water. If methane is suspected, it is best to lower nothing but a miner's safety lamp. If the light is not extinguished, the descent can be considered reasonably safe. When no safety lamp is available, and it is necessary to test with an open light, care should be taken to immediately withdraw all persons in close proximity to the shaft or pit as there may be an explosion.

Generally, there is no physiological warning of oxygen deficiency in the air. The first decided feeing is one of extreme weakness accompanied by dizziness, better described as partial paralysis, and the victim collapses practically without warning. To guard against this danger, a man should not enter old workings without having a rope tied around his body and at least two men on the top. The rope should be kept taut. Then if a distress signal is given, the explorer will not only be prevented from falling, but can be quickly pulled to fresh air and his life saved.

RELICS OF AGES LONG PAST

England Has Three of the Most Remarkable That the Whole World Has to Offer.

A loaf of bread more than 600 years old, it is said, is to be found at Ambaston, in Derbyshire, England. It was included in a grant of land from the crown in the reign of King John, and has remained in the Soar family ever since.

Almost as great a curiosity as this is a house 1,100 years of age, and yet fit for habitation. This old dwelling, the oldest inhabited house in England, was built in the time of King Offa of Mercia. It is octagonal in shape, the walls of its lower story being of great thickness. The upper part is of oak. At one time the house was fortified and known by the name of St. Germain's Gate. It stands close to the River Ver, and only a few yards from St. Albans abbey.

A marriage proposal 3,400 years of age is in existence in the British museum. It is the oldest marriage proposal of which there is any definite record. It consists of about ninety-eight lines of very fine cuneiform writing, and is on a small clay tablet made of Nile mud. It is a marriage proposal of a Pharaoh for the hand of the daughter of the king of Babylon. It was written about the year 1530 B. C.

Making the Hammer Safer.

The hammer is a useful tool, but its use is not quite free from danger to the user or from injury to materials. The flat, highly polished surface is likely to glance off the nail unless the blow is squarely delivered; and when the nail is of cast metal, its head often flies off and inflicts quite severe injuries.

One firm had innumerable accidents from this cause, and some of the men were permanently injured. Thereupon, the managers tried hammer heads with scored faces as an experiment, and owing to the success of the experiment, the polished faced hammer has been abolished in that firm's factory, except for special classes of work.

When the hammer's face is scored or roughened it is very much less likely to glance off the nail head. The fact that this type of hammer has proved so conspicuously successful and safe, has encouraged many manufacturers to place it on the market.

LEARN FROM THE ELEPHANT

Be Careful Where You Step and Take Credit When Due, Is by No Means Bad Advice.

A circus man says that an elephant is always careful where he steps. He goes forward one step at a time, and doesn't lose his hold upon one place of security until another is gained. If many of our business men had acquired this elephant philosophy and had followed it they wouldn't be hanging over financial precipices now.

If one goes about thinking that the world is filled with crooks and schemers, the world it filled with crooks and schemers. On the other hand, if one believes that the world is filled with fine neighborly, helpful, kindly folks, one finds people of that class in the great majority.

It isn't well to have too much humility. The man who gets into the habit of refusing to take credit for the good work he does is quite apt to be surprised when he discovers that people accept his denials as the truth. It is much better to be like the little girl in the old story who, when she was asked, "Who made you?" replied, "God made me that length," indicating with her hands the ordinary size of a new-born babe, "and I growed the rest myself."—Forbes Magazine.

The common [illegible]e balance of Ecuador is a short stick carrying a suspended pan at each end and held up by a cord around the center. The weight is a rock about the size of a man's fist, and, while no two of them are ever the same size, the merchant is always prepared to pledge his honor that the stone weighs a full and exact pound. The price for a commodity is almost never fixed, and as the Ecuadorean is always prepared and expects to come down somewhat from his first price, it speaks worlds for his optimism that he invariably tries to get more. The bargaining does not actually begin until you have disregarded the first figure and asked: "What is the last price?" ("el ultimo precio?"). In fact, I have been told voluntarily, when pricing ponchos, that the price was 25 sucres, but "I can come down a little."

What Cabbages Dislike.

Some time ago, a number of scientists, by means of a device invented by an Indian savant, were able to watch a plant growing, and study the beating of what in vegetable life corresponds to the heart of an animal. An average plant grows at the slow rate of one-millionth part of an inch per second, yet this device so magnifies this that, thrown upon the screen, the increase is easily seen. Plant life does not differ greatly from animal life. Place the roots in boiling water, it struggles and dies the same as the animal. A cabbage dislikes being boiled as greatly as would your pet dog. The only difference is that the cabbage can not protest, but squirms, wriggles and writhes.

Fire of unknown origin was discovered on the third floor of the Friends Rescue Home on North Hague Ave., last Sunday morning at 7:30 o'clock. A hurried alarm was turned in and the building was vacated by its occupants in eight minutes and before the fire department reached there. The entire third floor was badly damaged and the clothing of the 17 girls and the matron were entirely destroyed. The first and second floors were badly damaged by water. The building, which was purchased four years ago by the Friends Church denomination, for the purpose of a girls rescue home, is under the care of Miss Evangeline Reams, Field Secretary, who has accomplished a wonderful work in establishing and conducting such an institution.

There were, at the time of the fire, 17 girls and 6 babies in the building, besides the home officials. The girls have been temporarily placed in the Protestant Hospital and in different homes.

The building was fully insured and it is expected that all will be back in running order as soon as arrangements can be made to do so.

In 1921 there were 73 girls taken care of there and nearly that many babies were born. Of this number of girls over half of them left the home fully converted to the Christian life.

On January 31st Westwood Pythian Sisters staged a play entitled "The Old Maids Convention."

This was a dandy play and was enjoyed by all. The costumes were all antique and two of the leading players were colored. Everyone was hysterical when Susan Hinapole shot the rat and many were melted to tears when Mumfins read "Why She was an Old Maid."

The Human Incubator was a great stunt. Mr. Roebuck as salesman procured the favor of all the "Old Maids" by turning them into beautiful young girls as fair as the lillies of Solomon, even two were made fancy dancers. Think of it folks, how wonderful an invention this must be compared with the Ford and instruments of similar use.

This play was given to enrich the treasury. We are glad and well pleased over its success. This is one of many entertainments given during the winter, however, this was the first one, having charges. Watch for the announcement of the next entertainment or social.

FAMOUS WRITERS OF HUMOR

Americans Who Made Their Names Celebrated Were Essentially Men of Highest Character.

"Bill Nye," our own Edgar Wilson Nye, leaped into fame while writing humorous sketches for the Laramie Boomerang, of which he was editor. The name of "Bill Nye" was bestowed on him by his office associates. His book, "Baled Hay," was very popular for a time, but, like much humorous writing, its popularity was ephemeral. "Bill Nye" was much loved by all who knew him. He was considered "the greatest American liar."

William T. Adams was the noted "Oliver Optic," who wrote more than a thousand stories. He died much mourned by young readers, for whom most of his books were written.

Under the name of Artemus Ward, Charles F. Browne made a worldwide reputation as a lecturer and humorist. He was an inimitable wag; his humor was irrespressible and kept all about him in a constant state of merriment. He was the first writer to adopt phonetic spelling. He died in 1869.

"Bill Perkins" was contemporary with "Artemus Ward," and it was Ward who bestowed the nom de plume upon him. Melville D. Landon was essentially a "funny man," but not truly a humorist. He was a gentle, kindly man and one who loved his fellows.

Henry W. Shaw was the "Josh Billings" of humor and homely philosophy. He was kicked into fame by his "Essa on the Muel," which netted him $1.50, his first money earned in literature. He traveled and lectured extensively on "The Probabilities of Life; Perhaps Rain, Perhaps Not." He said: "There's cheats in all things; even pizen is adulterated." He was a delightful man and never did a mean thing in his life, and never had an enemy among good men. "Josh Billings" died of apoplexy in Monterey, Cal.

TEST FOR WRITERS OF PROSE

One Who Can Describe Clearly Proper Way of Tying Knot Is Master of Language.

Ropes more than any other subject are, I think, a test of a man's power of exposition in prose. If you can describe clearly the proper way of making this or that knot, then you are a master of the English tongue. You are not only a master—you are a sign, a portent, a new discoverer, an exception among your fellow men, a unique fellow.

For no one yet in this world surely has attained to lucidity in this most difficult branch of all expression. I find over and over again in the passages of those special books which talk of ropes, such language as, "This is a very useful knot and is made as follows: a bight is taken in the standing part and is then run over right-handedly, that is with the sun, then under the running part, and so through both times and hauled tight by the two ends."

But if any man should seek to save his life on a dark night in a sudden gust of wind by this description he would lose it. He would drown.

Take the simplest of them. Take the clove hitch. Write a sentence in English which will explain (without a picture) how to cast a clove hitch. I do not think you will succeed.—H. Belloc in the New Statesman.

A Note by Wordsworth.

Treasures are never exhausted; only, sometimes, there is a painful dearth of treasure seekers.

Not long ago a book buyer, rummaging in a second hand store at Oxford, unearthed a copy of Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, which he bought for $4.31. A little later, examining his purchase at his hotel, he found on a blank page some notes initialed "W." Reference to the Bodleian library revealed that the notes were by Wordsworth. He sold the book back to the dealer the same day for £12 ($60)—which to the true book lover will be the only painful part of the story.

A curious illustration of the enhanced value that an autograph gives a book is to be found in a volume that turned up at Dobell's, London, not long since. It cost Thomas Gray 9d (34 cents) which the poet no doubt thought dear enough. He wrote his name in it, however, and now it fetches £4.10 ($22.50).—From the Living Age.

He Was Stumped.

Back in an inland town in Illinois in the early days there was a justice of the peace who was very nearsighted. One sumer day he made out some subpoenas to be served on witnesses, and dosed off. A fly lit in his inkwell, extracted itself after some difficulty, and crawled onto one of the subpoenas.

The constable who was something of a practical joker, picked up the paper, and pointing to the fly tracks, said: "Judge, what is that name?"

The judge held the paper close to his eyes and squinted at it for a few minutes. Then scratching his head in perplexity, he answered:

"Looks like my handwriting, all right, but darned if I can make out the name."—Wall Street Journal.

The Lure of Office.

"Senator Shortsworthy says the greatest hardship of public life is the fact that it keeps him away from his home town and his old friends."

"Maybe so, but I notice when election time draws near the senator acts like a man who would be glad to make the separation permanent."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

NOT REALLY WOMAN'S FAULT

Time-Honored Joke That She Is Always Late for an Appointment Is Explained.

"The Woman's Side of the Story" this should be called. From time in the beginning the haughty male has inveighed against the once so much meeker half, and above all for her habit of being late. She was never late occasionally or off and on, or even most of the time. You could always count upon her being late. Some said it depended on the promptness with which you arrived, her tardiness being proportioned thereto.

But these were slanders over. No, she was late without exception. And she had her reasons.

"Man's natural habitat," says Genevieve, "is the street corner, the curb-stone club. Woman's is the home. Man stares. Woman is stared at. Man blandishes. Woman blushes. A man can stand on the curb for an hour or more without embarrassment. But a woman is conspicuous, no matter where she is and a veritable cynosure when alone. In fact, I don't think it's too much to say that nothing is noticed so quickly as an attractive and unescorted woman. That is why, when she makes an engagement to meet you at a stated place, she is sure to be at least fifteen minutes late. It is all due to her dread of being compelled to wait—and be stared at. Oh, of course, we love to be admired. But that's different. And safer."

FEW WALKERS IN AUSTRALIA

In That Respect Country Is Much Like Our Own West of Some Years Ago.

There was once a gay French humorist, Max O'Rell, who arrived in Australia on a hot day and straightway declared that the chief occupation of the people was holding up lamp posts. The abhorrence which pursued that Parisian would pale beside the indignation which would overwhelm the man who dared to declare that the Australian is conservative, and this in spite of the persistence of the galvanized iron roofs of early Queensland, the determination with which the black bowler hat still clings to progressive heads in Pitt or George street, Sydney, and the universal rule from Cooktown to Kalgoorlie of the good old roast beef.

All of which is intended to prepare us for the story retold in the Sydney Morning Herald, the widest read and most conservative journal in all Australasia, of the young Englishman in Rolf Bolderwood's novel who was invited to visit a New South Wales station seventy years ago, and innocently resolved to walk part of the way and see the country. After many uphappy misunderstandings reflecting on his right to be at large, the visitor borrows a horse and becomes respectable. That story would be in keeping today, with the exception that the motorcar and the airplane would have partly replaced the horse.

How Black Cats Got Bad Repute.

The origin of the superstitious aversion to black cats is believed to date back 900 years to the Sevennes mountain district of France. At that time one William, abbot of a monastery beside the river Hersult, and before then a warrior in the Crusades, decided to build a bridge across the swift, mountain stream. But as fast as the foundations for the piers were put down they were swept away by the torrent. He persisted for a long time and finally decided that his lack of success was due to interference by the devil.

He is supposed then to have invoked the Evil One and made a compact with him by the terms of which the abbot would complete the bridge, but the first animal to cross it would belong thereafter to the devil. So it came about, and the first animal to cross the bridge was a black cat.

Fly Has Natural Trap.

A peculiar traplike appendage, called a mask, enables the young dragon fly to capture the mosquito wriggler on which it feeds. The mask consists of a jointed, articulated arm that is attached to the under side of the head. At the extremity of this arm is the mask proper, which consists of two folding parts like hands, each of which is provided with a row of small sharp teeth on its outer edge.

When a tiny insect passes within reach of the young dragon fly it suddenly thrusts out the mask, grasps the insect within it and backs it into the mouth. When this organ is not in use it folds back over the head, covering it like a mask.

The young dragon fly lives in ponds and streams; and as it is very slow-moving, this trap is its salvation.

Sweet Odors.

Sweet and aromatic odors have always been in request among mankind. Eastern nations especially have ever been noted for their intense love of perfumes. Some years ago Professor Tyndall showed that sweet and aromatic odors were cooling to rooms—in other words, their presence bars out heat-rays of the sun, allowing those of light chiefly to enter. An ether-spray of perfume, kept up for a few minutes in a summer room too hotly heated by the sun, has almost a magical effect in cooling its atmosphere, for the reason assigned by Doctor Tyndall. It has just been discovered that odors and perfumes are also an antiseptic—that is to say, protective against epidemic diseases in a very high degree.

DON'T SWALLOW THEIR YOUNG

Popular Idea Concerning Snakes Is Not Borne Out by the Observations of Scientists.

Snakes don't swallow their young. The ventral scales on a female snake are controlled by a muscle just behind the head. Ordinarily they are horizontal, but when the mother snake scents danger she contracts the muscle on the back of her neck, which immediately brings the scales to a vertical position. This opens a slit under the bottom jaw, and at the same time loosens the abdominal skin, thus forming a pouch. The younger ones dart through the slit and into the pouch, and this is what has led people to think they take refuge in the mother snake's stomach.

It requires careful and skilled dissection to detect the pouch, because the skin shrinks when a snake is killed. When the poison gland is removed it tightens the skin under the neck, and the youngsters can't get into the pouch. In the female snake, between the pharynx and the gullet, there is a peculiar, lid-like valve, and anything passing this valve can't possibly return

DAMAGE DONE BY ICE STORM

One of the most distressing consequences of an ice storm is the irreparable damage done to trees. The telephone and telegraph poles can be replaced. Wires can be restrung. Train and trolley schedules can be restored. One and all these are inanimate things. But trees are living things and can no more be restored without a lapse of time than any other living thing. It takes a generation to grow a fine tree, remarks a writer in the Worcester Telegram. It takes a decade to line a residential district street with shade, a second decade for that shade to increase and become an asset to the neighborhood; a third decade sees the trees which have grown up with the children become, instead of a subsidiary attraction, the principal one in the neighborhood.

Yet in a single night the careful solicitude, the care and nurture of the trees is destroyed. The great limbs which residents have watched grow for years, the towering tops which twenty years before barely came to the porch roof and which for the last ten years have given grateful shade through the summer and autumn are broken, split and sundered. The thirty years have gone for naught.

Other ephemeral things, such as telephone service, trolley schedules and trains will resume their accustomed routine within a day or two after the skies clear.

Only the shattered trunk of the trees untimely cut down by the ice will remain as a reminder.

It takes a generation of man to grow a fine tree.

HOW CHARCOAL IS MADE

Method of Burning Is Much the Same, No Matter Where the Process Is Carried On.

The usual method of making or "burning" charcoal is to build up a cone-shaped pile of wood, about twelve feet in height and ten to forty feet in diameter—leaving a central hole or chimney; then to burn it from above downward, and from the outside inward. The trees are cut down in winter and should be fairly dry. The wood is built up with the bark outward, the largest pieces being placed furthest inside, and a covering of turf, or of charcoal dust and soil, is placed over the whole, leaving holes at the sides of the bottom for air. The first three or four days bring out the moisture onto the cover. The openings around the base are then covered, and holes are made about halfway up. When the smoke ceases to issue from these, they are closed and other holes are made below. Tar products, which collect when the charcoal is nearly burned, are removed by means of pipes or gutters. When the air-holes cease to emit flame and smoke they are covered and the pile is allowed to cool for two or three days. Then the charcoal is "drawn," and any pieces still burning are quenched with water or sand.

Seem Larger Near Horizon.

The United States naval observatory says: "The sun and moon seem larger near the horizon because of an optical illusion. The horizon appears to be more distant than the zenith because the eye, in looking toward the horizon, rests upon many objects by the way. The sun or moon near the horizon and at the zenith is seen to be the same object in both positions; but when near the horizon, it seems larger because the distance is apparently greater, the mind unconsciously reasoning that being so much farther away, the sun or moon must be larger in order to look the same.

"The moon at the horizon is really about 4,000 miles more distant from the observer than when nearly overhead; and its apparent diameter, as measured by an astronomical instrument, is actually less by about one-sixtieth."

Old Friends.

The bride's mother had her doubts about the feasibility of letting Pickie, the South Carolina cook, wait on the door during the arrival of wedding guests. True, she made the best sweet potato pies ever, but she knew so little of formal northern customs. However, there seemed no alternative. Pickie ushered the guests quite solemnly and wordlessly in. However, near the last there came a family friend who was a frequent visitor. On opening the door and seeing of all the throng the first familiar face, Pickie broke into a loud paean of welcome.

"Come right in, Missus Brown, Ah knows you, 'deed, Ah does. You jes' walk right in. Ah'se mighty glad to see you, Missus Brown, deed Ah is." And Mrs. Brown walked in, the observed of all observers.—Chicago Journal.

Frogs in Rocks and Trees.

Attention may be invited to the astonishing longevity of the popular delusion, to which even educated persons at the present day give credence, that living frogs, toads and other animals are sometimes discovered in hermetically sealed cavities in tree trunks and rocks.

A little reflection shows, from the very nature of things, that such tales are incredible, and that those who vouch for them must be mistaken in their observations, as the most sharp-sighted persons are deceived by the feats of a prestidigitator.

REFUSE TO ACCEPT "SMITH"

Members of That Family Have Hard Work Convincing Strangers That the Name Is Real.

"It isn't the fact that Smith is such a common name that I dislike it," said Miss Smith, according to a New York Sun writer, "but the fact that every one who wants to give a fictitious name just says she's Miss Smith. Every time I have to introduce myself somebody sort of snickers about it and supposes my name is Guggenheimer or Cafferey or something else. Take my sister and myself, for instance. We often go out together to the rink or down in the village for supper.

"There's always some nice boys around who want to dance with us or skate around a couple of times. Of course, you don't need any official introduction these days, and the boys know it. So they come over and in a little while they're telling us where they work and their telephone number and how we look like their sisters, and all that. It's all right, too, because you get used to that way of getting acquainted, and it's much better than some funny guys, who try to hand you a line that they're in the movies or doing fiction writing.

"Well, anyway, pretty soon, if they like us, they say, 'You're a pretty nifty little dancer. I'd like to see you again. You know all about me, so tell me your name, will you?' Then when I say Miss Smith, they say: 'Come on, quit your kidding. That doesn't mean anything to me. Tell me your real name.'

"When I insist my name is Smith, they say, 'What's the matter? You're married or something.'

"So we don't tell our real names any more. We say we're Miss Cooper or Stuyvesant or something else, and since we don't look like sisters we each have to use different names to be believed. Funny, isn't it?"

BELIEF HAS A FOUNDATION

Idea That Seventh Child of a Seventh Child Is "Gifted" Not Altogether a Fallacy.

The seventh child of a seventh child (sometimes "the seventh son of a seventh son") is supposed to be gifted with the power of curing headaches and more serious ailments by the laying on of hands, and to have other magical powers. In other words, he is supposed to have a "gift."

Among the later discoveries in eugenics was that the younger children of very intelligent men inherited more of their father's intelligence than did the older children; or, as sometimes happened, that the children of a younger son were supremely gifted with intelligence. The reason for this—according to eugenic theories—is that talented men or women, like many others, usually marry when fairly young if they marry at all. The older children of such a talented man have therefore the tendency to inherit only what mental qualities he may have developed at that time.

But supposing that the talented man, as is usually the case, continues to develop amazing mental qualities, then if he has children when his brain is completely mature, those children will probably inherit their father's matured mentality; or, if they do not inherit it, their children (the clever man's grandchildren) receive the inheritance.

Writers Got Money in Advance.

The Seventeenth or Eighteenth century author traded rather more on the trustfulness of the public than does the new school, for he peddled his book before it was written and sometimes spent the proceeds before he had completed half a dozen chapters. The only difference is that his peddling was particular rather than general; he went round the houses of the great and wealthy with his "plans" and the great and wealthy generally in sufficient numbers, got rid of him by agreeing to have their names put down for a subscription. If they were very great or very wealthy they might expect a dedication thrown in, as it were, in which respect the modern peddler has no advantage, for no obligation is implied in the purchase of a copy of the book.—Manchester Guardian.

Known by Their Hats.

All the various tribes of Persia are to be distinguished and recognized by their headgear. So, at the capital, Teheran, there is to be seen a greater assortment of hats and headgear than in any other place in the world. Some are picturesque, some are ludicrous. The Kurds, of which there are 600,000 in the country, wear a hat which looks like an inverted coffee pot, black, bound round with gay-colored handkerchiefs. That of another tribe is of white felt, resembling in shape a preserving kettle. Hats are exclusively the privilege of men. Women do not wear headcovering.

"Playful" Indeed!

In his book, "Flashlights From the Seven Seas," the Rev. William L. Stidger, of Detroit, says the Battaks of Sumatra have what he refers to facetiously as a "playful" custom of getting rid of their old men. When a man gets so old that they think it is about time for him to tell his last tale, they put him up a coconut tree. Then all the young bucks of the village get together and try to shake him down. If he is too feeble to hold on, and comes down, that is a sign of Heaven that his days are through, and they proceed to cook and eat him.

Cat Took Nap in Limousine.

The cat that looked at a king was only slightly more ambitious than a Hyde Park tabby that took possession of a limousine standing by the curb, remarks the Chicago Post. The cat, a bedraggled stray, was pussyfooting through the rain of one of the recent cold days, evidently in search of a comfortable place for a nap. It passed by doorways and flivvers as not up to its aristocratic demands, then spied the limousine standing at the curb and promptly decided to move in.

Unfortunately for the cat, the doors of the car were closed. Tabby found this out after a thorough inspection that started at the left side running board, included the top and then the right side running board. Finally the cat tried the front, but the windshield was closed, too. Then tabby picked out a spot on the hood that still retained some heat from the engine, curled up and went to sleep.

Tabby held possession until the owner appeared.

Weeds.

What hidden virtue is in these things that it is granted them to sow themselves with the wind, and to grapple the earth with this immitigable stubbornness, and to flourish in spite of obstacles, and never to suffer blight beneath any sun or shade, but always to mock their enemies with the same wild luxuriance? It is truly a mysterious symbol. There is a sort of sacredness about them. Perhaps, if we could penetrate nature's secrets, we should find what we call weeds are more essential to the well being of the world than the most precious fruit or grain. This may be doubted, however, for there is an unmistakable analogy between these wicked weeds and the bad habits and sinful propensities which have overrun the moral world; and we may as well imagine that there is good in one as in the other.—Hawthorne.

Certainly MUST be "MAKING GOOD"

The recent cold snap put Guaranty Coal (our coal) squarely "on trial," and the words of praise coming from many, many homes in this community vindicate our judgment in bringing this coal to the Hilltop and suburbs. Recognized and appreciated is our determination that our fellow citizens be assured an ample supply at all times of Guaranty Lump, Ohio and West Virginia.

AN AFTERTHOUGHT. Isn't it true that, after all, folk hereabouts are quick to reward business courage and business enterprise? We have found it so.

"A TRUE BUT SAD STORY"

Not long ago an elderly lady, assisted by her daughter on either side, came into our office and sought what could not be purchased—sight. The youthful and middle portion of the life of this lady had been one of extreme labor with but slight compensation and the consequences were considerable neglect in various ways. The eyes especially were extremely needful of assistance and such as had been given was through cheap and imperfectly fitted glasses which was more harmful than good. The consequences were blindness with all its numerous unpleasantries. Blind, yes blind to the faces of husband, children, friends and all the manifold beauties of this wonderful country. Terrible isn't it? When told that sight was permanently gone this grand old lady who had reared a most splendid family, sobbed aloud and so continuous was this sorrowing that soon all those nearby were engaged in a similar manifestation of their grief. But the neglect of proper care was responsible for this condition, cheap and imperfectly fitted glasses were largely to blame. The idea seemed to prevail with this lady, as it does with so many others, that all glasses were practically alike and the cheaper you can secure a pair the better you are off. She realizes now that even a ten cent pair may be very expensive if they are not what the eyes need.

Optical establishments engaged in the "spec" game are responsible for much of the misery and blindness of today and it will continue to be so unless the public awake to this dangerous method of attempting to care for their eyes. The subject of always having good and comfortable vision seems to seldom enter into the minds of even our thinking public; it takes a specific case of eye suffering and perhaps blindness in our immediate midst before we truly grasp what it means to preserve the human vision; this reminds us of locking the door after the horse has been stolen.

It is indeed interesting to those who know the real worth of optical goods, glasses especially, to note how the public will even pay carfare of a few dollars or perhaps drive twenty-five to fifty miles to secure a pair of glasses marked "Special for one or two days only" and at a price from $3.50 to $4.00. The facts are that these special priced specs are used as a bait to get people into the optical store and then you are told that this price does not include an examination, or if it does you are usually informed that your eyes require special ground lenses and the whole matter winds up by selling you a pair of glasses for from $15.00 to $25.00. When this has been accomplished you will have to admit that a sufficient price has been paid to secure the very best of service including properly ground lenses and a first class frame. If you should purchase the usual $3.50 "Special for today only" kind, any reliable, honest optical firm could have furnished you the same thing for $2.00 and still make a small margin of profit. The facts are, however, that an honest, honorable and reliable optical establishment will not, nor cannot, be induced to deal in such merchandise.

The properly educated and trained eyesight specialists of today realize the true worth of your eyes, what they mean to you and your friends. They are interested in giving you an honest service, a real service that means the preservation of your eyes and sight. If you choose to gamble with your eyes and sight why spend $3.00 to $4.00 to do it? Why not go to the cheap store and do the same thing for tweny-five to fifty cents? If you are willing to try a thing why not go the limit in your experimenting? Don't do it in a half-hearted way. There are nearly 20,000 needlessly blind in the United States today and the number is rapidly increasing. It is costing the tax payers no small amount of money to house, feed, clothe, school and bury this number. If you are a tax payer you realize your taxes are high and you may be prone to lay the burden at the feet of your County, State and National Officials. WHY NOT CURTAIL THE EVILS THAT PRODUCE THE EXPENSES?

The very best and most thorough eye service you can get will still have its short-comings, then why not endeavor to get the very best, realizing that it means good and comfortable vision, efficiency, in your daily work, health and happiness throughout your years of living.

Yours respectfully,
FRED L. SULZBERGER,
Optometrist

Sarah Reed Garner, wife of C. E. Garner died at her home near Batesville, Ohio, February 2, 1922, at the age of 48 years and 26 days, of the dread disease cancer. She died without a struggle and I believe without pain, with God's promise in her mind. Her illness was of 2 years, 1 month duration. To this union of 19 years was born 1 son who died in infancy. She is survived by her husband, father and mother, two sisters and five brothers. Hers is the first death in the family, the youngest brother being 34 years old. She was one of the Pioneers of the Hilltop, having moved here during the spring of 1898. She was specially interested and an active worker in various affiliations of Glenwood M. E. Church and Red Cross. She was a member of Epworth League cabinet that held first social to raise money for the present church. At the age of 12 years she was converted and gave herself to God's keeping, also became member of church. Of recent months she has been an ardent advocate of the New Thought Doctrine. It can be truly said by all who knew her and understood her that she was one woman out of a thousand.

She died steadfast in her faith, at peace with the world and confident of a place in His Kingdom. So it was God's will that she be called and we must abide by his decision. Of recent years she was a resident of Hilltop a part of the time only.

How impossible for anyone to forecast with accuracy what a year may bring forth; what the future of these swiftly moving and rapidly changing times may bring to us. Present history is full of surprises. The very thing that men have not supposed possible have come to pass, and the thoughtful are becoming careful in their prognostications. One thing we know, God reigns on high and "All things work together for good to those who love Him." This scripture can only be understood in the light of the fact that the brief period we spend here is but a preparation for immortal life yonder, where splendid and abiding realities take the place of things here so deceptive and changeful.

Favro is an attractive, interesting preacher, a man of God who drives home the truth and exalts the Christ. Three Scotsmen went to church, each clutching tightly the bowbee he intended to contribute when the plate was passed. Consternation reigned when the minister announced that this particular Sunday an effort was to be made to raise the mortgage and asked every member of the congregation to make a substantial offering.

During the prayer the Scots held a whispered consultation as to the solution of their dilemma, and reached a satisfactory decision.

One fainted and the other two carried him out.—London Opinion.

THIS AIREDALE REAL FRIEND

Dog, Allowed Liberty, Brings Dainties to Hound Which Is Confined to Its Kennel.

Kind heartedness that might well serve as an example for human kind is displayed by "Pat" an Airedale pup of Point Pleasant, W. Va., says a correspondent, the object of its fine feeling being a hound owned by Bert Shiflet. The story of the four-footed pet's benevolence is attested by members of both families, who are neighbors. Shiflet keeps his hound, "Jack," tied in the back yard. Thomas' Airedale, however, has the untrammeled liberty of a freeborn American dog and makes the most of it. He is a good forager and knows the location and probable yield of every garbage can in the neighborhood. Mrs. Shiflet feeds Jack generously, and not infrequently the menu contains an appetizing bone, but she did not give Jack all the bones that accumulated beside his kennel. All became clear the other day when Mrs. Shiflet saw the Airedale approach Jack's kennel with a big soupbone in his mouth, set it down in front of his tethered friend, wag his tail gleefully, bark a message of good cheer, dance playfully about for a moment and then dash off for some new adventure. A watch kept on the Airedale showed that trips were made to the hound's quarters every day. Sometimes instead of a bone the offering was a bit of meat or some other dainty.

OLD MINE STILL PRODUCING

That at Falun, Sweden, Has Been Delivering Up Its Riches Since the Year 1225.

On the outskirts of the town of Falun, in the north of Sweden, is the oldest mine in the world. It began to produce copper in 1225.

In the Seventeenth century this mine was the chief source of the copper supply of Europe. Today it no longer produces copper in large quantities, but from its deep-cut galleries come the sulphur pyrites that are used for the manufacture of sulphuric acid and other chemicals.

It is one of the most old-fashioned mines imaginable. You will find no rapid hauling machinery, no cage that descends at lightning speed into the bowels of the earth. You walk into the mine through sloping galleries, and then climb down to its depths by means of long ladders. As you descend you wish that you had brought an overcoat, for the walls are covered with ice.

Ventilation and drainage are accomplished by means of the most antiquated pumping gear in existence in any pit.

Besides copper and pyrites, the Falun mine produces gold. From it came all the gold used to make the Swedish crown and scepter, and it has provided most of the metal for the gold coinage of that country.

Photography of Words.

Devaux-Charbonnel, the French scientist, has photographed the variation of current in a microphonic circuit by the aid of a Blondal oscillograph. The photographs are reproductions of the syllables pronounced by a human voice, and it is expected that they will be of use in the solution of various problems in telephony. In studying the impression made by syllables the experimenter found that each syllable is composed of 30 to 40 complete vibrations. The begining and the end of the syllables are modified by the impressions of the consonants, but the modifications cover only four or five periods, so that each syllable has 20 to 30 regular vibrations corresponding to its vowel. The method permits the study of the higher harmonics, which give character to words.

Codfish.

Codfish is said to be the world's most important--which means the most eaten—fish. Few fish are more prolific. It has been asserted that one weighing 75 pounds will contain over 9,000,000 eggs. Perhaps the tarpon is one of them, for it is a large fish with a very fine roe. The cod is practically omnivorous, finding means to supply great schools wherever food of any sort is found. It is found in many parts of the world other than the North American "banks" and it is said that it has been fished for by fishermen of northern Europe since the beginning of recorded history and of course for unaccountable centuries before man began to make written records.

MARK TWAIN AND WATTERSON

Lifelong Friendship Between Two of the Brainiest Men the United States Has Produced.

The late Henry Watterson was a long-time friend of Mark Twain, as of nearly every other prominent American literary worker of his day, and related many anecdotes that resulted from this friendship. Mark Twain's mind turned over to the droll.

"Once in London I was living with my family at 108 Mount street. Between 108 and 102 there was the parochial workhouse, quite a long and imposing edifice," Mr. Watterson relates in his autobiography. "One evening, upon coming in from an outing, I found a letter he had written on the sitting room table. He had left it with his card. He spoke of the shock he had received upon finding that next to 102—presumably 103—was the workhouse. He had loved me, but had always feared I would end by disgracing the family—being hanged or something—but the 'work'us,' that was beyond him; he had not thought it would come to that. And so on through pages of horseplay; his relief on ascertaining the truth and learning his mistake, his regret at not finding me at home, closing with a dinner invitation.

"It was at Geneva, Switzerland, that I received a long, overflowing letter, full of flamboyant oddities, written from London. Two or three hours later came a telegram. "Burn letter. Blot it from your memory. Susie is dead."

SCHEME WORKED OUT WELL

How Host Made Pretty Sure That Unwelcome Guest Would Not Attend Engagement Party.

The problem was how to invite a certain young woman to the engagement party and still be certain that she would decline to attend. She was known to be a killjoy, but if she were not invited she would talk of it.

About two weeks prior to the party the couple managed to bring together the young woman and a masculine acquaintance of theirs. After the proper introduction the innocent young man and the young woman were left alone.

The following week the young man received two theater tickets from his acquaintance who was to be engaged, who said he would not be able to use them himself. Three days later the young woman received an invitation to the party.

"He's a nice fellow," ran part of the letter in answer to the engagement party invitation, "and he has asked me to accompany him to the theater on the very evening of your party. I would like to come to your party, but I gave him my promise before I received your invitation, so you see how it is: I do hope you will excuse me."—New York Sun.

Giants.

From Nature we learn of a recent meeting of the British association, wherein it was brought out that the popular conception is untrue regarding power of giants and the magnificent types of masculinity which they are supposed to be. Statistics were presented to show that giants were relatively feeble, usually short lived, and, in the majority of cases, devoid of those features peculiar to masculinity. Giganticism was said to be identified with abnormal conditions of two small organs located at the base of the brain—the thyroid gland and the pituitary body. The overactivity of these, preceding or near the period of birth, is the primary cause. Sometimes, however, their overactivity comes into play after the individual has attained his full growth, and, as a result, an overgrowth of the extremities takes place.

Women Have Changed Little.

Women who danced for and with the Pharaohs put on the war paint just as enthusiastically as the lady of today.

A collection of the vanity pots of an Egyptian lady of quality, recently from the tomb which held her mummified corpse, has just been brought to London. In it, wonderfully blown glass took the place of the silver toilet accessory of the present time.

Some of the glass pots are beautifully iridescent—due to the inroads made on the pots by the acid in the stibium with which they were filled, and with which the Egyptian beauty painted her eyelids, and eyebrows.

The collection included a henna pot still containing traces of the dye with which feminine Egypt of the period hennaed her finger nails—as London's smart set is doing this season.

Until the middle of the Seventeenth century a familiar figure at a Virginia church door on a Sunday morning was the county sheriff. The law requiring attendance at divine worship was of great assistance to him. It rounded up the planters and small farmers from remote corners and enabled him with a minimum of effort to serve writs, warrants, summonses, executions and similar official papers.

This practical method disturbed the planters who did not fancy official intrusion on such an occasion. So, in 1658, they passed a law prohibiting the service of official papers on Sunday, at the parish church or elsewhere, and the sheriff was sent off on his web of trails the other six days to do as well as he might.

Cord Tire Facts.

A 30 by 3½ cord tire contains almost 9,000 feet of cord or over a mile and a half. A 35 by 5 has over 30,000 feet of cord or over 5½ miles. The cord, similar to medium-weight fishing line, is made of long fiber cotton, of far better grade than used in ordinary cotton goods. Each cord, insulated in rubber, is separated from the next by a layer of rubber insulating, which gives additional strength. A standard make five-inch cord tire has 20 to 26 cords per inch and a strength in fabric carcass alone in excess of 2,400 pounds to the square inch, irrespective of the strength given by other parts.

ERROR COMMITTED BY MANY

Grave Mistake to Leave Business Position in a General Cloud of Unpleasant Feeling.

The man or woman of small ambition and smaller achievement feels that it is his privilege and pleasure always to leave a position he is "quitting" in a cloud of unpleasant feeling. So long as he remains in his position he puts up with unpleasantnesses, stifles his dislikes for the men over him and does his best to grin and bear things. When he realizes that he can take his destiny in his own hands, and ask to have his name stricken off the pay roll, he takes intense satisfaction in airing his prejudices and showing every one in the place just how he feels about things. He undoes in a day all that he has gained in the months or years that he has worked there.

The man or woman with ambition knows that the world of business is a small place. Merely from a selfish point of view it is essential to maintain pleasant relations even with those who, you feel, have treated you unjustly. If you have put up with their ill treatment while working for them surely you ought to be more willing to do so when you have the inner satisfaction of knowing that you are going. In fact, you can stretch a point and forgive and forget old rancors. It may be, you know, that in another shuffle up you will be placed in a position where one of the persons for whom you have the most spite will be placed in a position where his friendship will mean a great deal to you. So do the well-bred thing, which is to stifle your own petty animosities and exercise your self-control to the extent of leaving the old place with a handshake all-round.—Exchange.

THOUGHT NOT REALLY RAPID

Mind Moves Comparatively Slowly, Notwithstanding Expression That Has Become Common.

"As quick as thought" is an expression much used to denote the acme of speed in action, but, like so many popular expressions, this one is misleading. Thought, or at least the mental registering of a sensation, is not an exceedingly speedy process, the thought impulse moving at the comparatively slow speed of 110 feet a second, or 75 miles an hour. Light travels nearly nine million times as swiftly. Thought would be hopelessly beaten in a race with a motorcar.

Perhaps a good illustration of the comparative slowness of thought waves is to assume that a man had an arm 75 miles long and that, when he was not looking a friend should grasp his hand. Before the owner of that arm became conscious that his hand had been touched, the friend would have released it, and had time to walk four miles or eat a very extensive dinner.—Kansas City Star.

Two Kinds of Thinkers.

There are two kinds of people in the world—word people and fact people. The former deal in words and phrases and form their judgments on opinions and beliefs. The latter analyze questions and draw conclusions only from the point of view of what they believe to be established facts. The two types are as far apart as the north and south poles and are incapable of carrying on anything in the way of intelligent argument or debate, because they do not talk the same language or think by the same method. The word man starts with a desired conclusion and fashions his facts to produce that result. The fact man analyzes his subject, seeks to establish the truth in regard to facts which have a bearing on it and then fearlessly draws what he believes to be honest conclusions. His process is like the working out of a mathematical problem; he does not know what the answer will be until the last figure is made. He thinks forward, while the word man thinks backward.

J. Berry, attorney-at-law, office Ruggery Building, 20 East Gay street, Room 58. Office phone, Citz. 5938. Residence, Hilltop 2700.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE

"What became of that young man who was paying so much attention to you?"

"I don't know. I let him walk to the grocery store one afternoon with me, and after he saw how much we had to pay for things to eat, he just quit coming to see me."

FAIR ENOUGH

Most men like little women,
And little women like most men.
What could be fairer?

VERY SIMILAR

"Your husband says he leads a dog's life," said one woman.

"Yes it's very similar," answered the other. "He comes in with muddy feet, makes himself comfortable by the fire and waits to be fed.'

To Utilize Waste Time.

A system in vogue in a few New York department stores to utilize the spare time of their employees when customers are few is to hold meetings of a semi-social character, in which a part or the whole of their forces can participate. One of the most popular and beneficial of those systems, from the viewpoint of the employers and the employees, is to assemble the forces and sing songs and hear short addresses delivered on general subjects by store executives or others. A daily use of that system, according to one store manager who has had the system in practice for considerable time, is to infuse greater enthusiasm among its employees for their work and to inculcate a spirit of co-operation between the employer and his employees.

How Man Spoils the Air.

"Windows open more would keep doctors from the door." A very large quantity of fresh air is spoiled and rendered foul by the act of breathing. A man spoils not less than a gallon every minute. In eight hours' breathing a full-grown man spoils as much fresh air as seventeen three-bushel sacks could hold. If he were shut up in a room seven feet broad, seven feet long and seven feet high, the doors and windows fitting so tightly that no air could pass through, he would die poisoned by his own breath, in a very few hours; in twenty-four hours he would have spoiled all the air contained in the room, and have converted it into poison.

Domestic Stuff.

"Oh, goodness gracious mercy, I'm most distracted! I've looked for it everywhere and I simply can't find it: wailed Mrs. Worryiotte.

"Why dontcha look where you're sure yuh didn't put it?" inquired Worryiotte, who knew his woman.

Told at the Dinner Table.

Bobby—Yessir, and that giraffe's neck was—why, it was as long as daddy's neck, and—daddy's neck and—

His Mother—Bobby, haven't I told you I don't know how many times you mustn't exaggerate so?—Wayside Tales.

CHRISTMAS TREES WILL LAST

Little Danger That in Years to Come the Children Will Be Deprived of Joy

Don't join any gloom group that may be trying to form a society for the prevention of cruelty to Christmas trees, advises a writer in the Kansas City Star.

The forests are there to be used, and if, as we utilize the trees, we make it possible by replanting for our children and our children's children to have trees, there is no reason for not having Christmas trees as well as all the lumber we need.

That is the way the scientific forester, the man who grows trees like the farmer grows wheat, looks at this matter of Christmas trees.

While there is still some regrettable ruthless cutting of spruce and fir for the Christmas tree market in northern states, many Christmas trees are now a by-product of the forests. There are small trees in every properly managed woodlot that must be sacrificed so that the others may have room to grow. These make fine Christmas trees.

Christmas trees are also being raised in nurseries. Baby spruce and fir trees are planted by man so that the babies and children of man can have Christmas trees in their nurseries. And a Christmas tree is usually between the ages of five and ten years, just about the age of the child who enjoys Christmas most. In the future years, it is expected that nearly all of our Christmas trees will be raised by nurserymen from the forests.

Wifely Diplomacy.

"My husband positively refuses to do errands for me downtown."

"Mine used to, but I cured him of it mighty quick. 'Oh, well,' I said, 'I suppose I can do it myself. And while I am downtown I might as well do a little shopping, so you might let me have $25.' He never refused after that."—Boston Transcript.

SHEEP AND GOATS

A young man in New England, who had been converted in a revival, tried very hard to have his brother join the church with him.

"But, John," said his brother, "if both of us join the church, who's to weigh the wool?"

The extremely thin woman in the street car resented the stout woman's crowding her, and turning to her remarked:

"They ought to charge by weight in this car."

The stout woman looked at her contempuously and remarked quickly:

"Well if they did, they wouldn't stop for you at all."

Is No National Holiday.

Christmas is not a national holiday. New Year's day is not a national holiday. Thanksgiving day is not a national holiday. The Fourth of July is not a national holiday. Neither is Memorial day. Neither is Washington's birthday. Neither is any other day.

There is no such day as a national holiday in the United States. A United States statute would be required to constitute a particular day as a national holiday, and congress has stopped short of this action, numerous constitutional lawyers insisting that such an act belongs to the powers of the several states and not to the general government.

The Fourth of July is not strictly a national holiday, though it is a nation-wide holiday, having been made a holiday by acts of all the states and by the common consent and usage of the people.

New York—...ers of the United States navy took concerted action today in protest of authors and public speakers who use the expression "spend money like a drunken sailor."

Philadelphia—An indignation meeting was held today in Independence hall by the Society for the Protection of Hatmakers, who protested the use by writers and public speakers of the expression "as mad as a hatter."

Chicago—The Independent Order of Taxicab Drivers will meet tonight at the Blackstone to protest the indiscriminate use of the characterization "a former member of the James gang now driving a taxi," and similar terms of opprobrium they say have been heaped upon chauffeurs who drive cars for hire.

Omaha—The local union of jackrabbit hunters at a meeting today decided to petition congress for a bill prohibiting writers and public speakers using the simile "as wild as a March hare." They say such language is discouraging to those who hunt such prey.

San Antonio—The International League of Crutch Makers went on strike today in protest of several vaudeville comedians who recently used the expression "as funny as a crutch" in local playhouses.—Kansas City Star.

WERE SYMBOLS OF CREATION

Among Ancient Egyptians the Beetle Was Believed to Be the Form of the Sun God.

A scarab is the representation of the sacred beetle found on Egyptian gems, coins, mummies, obelisks and works of art. The appearance and rapid multiplication of beetles in the mud left on the subsidence of the Nile gave rise to the belief in their spontaneous generation, and they became the symbol of creation and creative power. In their circular shape and the bright golden tints of their wing cases they were thought to resemble the shape and luster of the sun and thus were taken to be the forms in which the sun god appeared.

Scarabs were cut in stones and employed as seals and amulets. They were bored through their length so that they could be strung like beads. After the commingling of the Egyptian with other races, agnostics and Christians interpreted the meaning of these gems in accordance with their own beliefs. Those of the most ancient period, such as are found on mummies, are inscribed with the names of the kings held in highest veneration, Thutmosis III, Rameses II and Amenophis III, and frequently with some hieroglyphic symbol. The larger of them have some short religious or historic inscription on their under side.

PAINTED BY GREAT ARTISTS

In Olden Days Men of Genius Turned Out Swinging Signs That Were Really Attractive.

The staring signs that have so long offended the eye on the tops of buildings ultimately will be removed simply for the reason of public safety. Boards of fire underwriters object that the structures not only serve to spread the flames, but greatly hinder the fireman's work. One might wish that the mandate included all the encroachments of the signboard, remarks the Kansas City Star.

Man diligently advertised his wares even before the day of the frescoed goat over the Pompeiian dairy. But in those old days the desire for custom was tempered by a zest for art. The floating cupid, pictured in front of an ancient sandal makers' shop, balancing one sandal on the curly head and waving the mate in his chubby hand, is a thing of beauty as well as a symbol of trade. The picturesque swinging boards of some generations past were outgrowths of the display of armorial bearings and heraldic crests, sumptuous and pleasing to the eye.

In days gone by artists of note did not scorn to try a prentice hand on such signs. The "Mule and Muleteer," an early work of Correggio, was originally painted for an inn. Many a royal academician has given the public a lion or a unicorn. The age of artistic sign painting received its death blow in the reign of George II when such erections fell under the head of "street nuisances."

ADVANTAGE IN "AUBURN" HAIR

According to This, It Gives Its Possessor a Distinct Start in Matrimonial Race.

If you are a girl and have red hair, pay no attention to those who nickname you "Carrots." It will not be a sign of their disrespect, but of their jealously, asserts London Answers.

An eminent doctor has just expressed the opinion that the red-haired woman has a distinct advantage over all others in the matrimonial race. Man is attracted by the subtle shades of copper and red in a girl's hair, and this explains why "henna" dye is so popular. The girl who calls you "Carrots" the loudest will be the first to try the effect of "henna" herself.

To complete the conquest, a buttermilk complexion must be added. If you do not possess one naturally, there may be hope for you if you give up flesh food and become a vegetarian, living on fruits, cream, salads, raisins, and honey.

But, remember this—a woman's graces must be natural, or they will not outlive the glamor of courtship. No self-respecting man will like to feel that his love has been captured by dyes and diet. And no self-respecting girl will try thus to capture him.

Robin Native in Three Continents.

English robins have namesakes in three continents, for in China and New Zealand as well as in America, settlers from England gave the familiar name to a native bird. The American migratory thrush recalls by its reddish breast the brighter gorget of the English species. Though duller of plumage, the New Zealand robin earned the name by its tameness; and there is a touch of the same friendly nature in the Chinese bird.

Several English birds are distinguished by a human nickname; tomtit, jackdaw, magpie, jenny wren and even philip sparrow. But only the robin redbreast has made friends so thoroughly with man that its full name is almost forgotten, while its nickname is coextensive with the English language.

Big Tree as Reservoir.

In central Africa the gigantic baobab tree, whose trunk sometimes attains a diameter of 40 feet, often serves as a natural cistern, retaining rainwater in large quantities in a cavity formed at the top of the broad trunk.

Taking the hint thus afforded by nature, the Arabs artificially hollow out the trunks of large baobabs and fill them with water during the prevalence of rains as a provision against the dry seasons.

These cisterns are in some cases twenty feet in height and eight or ten feet in diameter. The water is used both for drinking and for irrigating melon patches.

Babes Buried in Sand.

An infant in Guinea is usually buried in sand up to its waist whenever the mother is busy, and this is the only cradle it ever knows.

The little Lapp, on the other hand, fares most luxuriously in its mother's shoe. These Lapp shoes are big affairs of skin stuffed with soft moss, and can be hung on a peg or tree branch safely out of the way.

The Chinese baby is tied to the back of an older child, who goes about its play quite ignoring its burden.—London Tit-Bits.

DO MORE THAN GUARD SHEEP

Dogs of Scotland Are Also the Companions and Protectors of the Crofter Children.

The sheepdogs of Scotland are guides and defenders not only of the sheep flocks, but also the children of the crofters. Were it not for these shaggy, intelligent fellows, born shepherds of the weak and defenseless, it would be unsafe for the children to go far from the lonely and isolated crofts in the outlying districts. The schools are far distant and it is a long, rough journey across the moor from home to school and back again. And so the sheepdog goes along with them and safe-conducts them to and fro. Moreover, he must carry the books for them, for the little folk would be unequal to the task of carrying any extra weight in the long tramp. Over the dog's back the books are slung and no one need worry for the safety of the children or their belongings. The sheepdog knows his duty and is proud and eager to do it.

The rural libraries established by the Carnegie trust are also using the dogs in distributing books among the homes of the crofters. In fact, it would scarcely be possible for the inhabitants whose crofts are so far from the library centers to share in this great benefice, were there not the sheepdogs to act as librarians. Good literature for the elders as well as the children is dispatched and returned on the sturdy backs of these reliable dogs.

IN SHADE OF HIMALAYAS

Majestic Panorama Displayed When the Gray Clouds Break and Reveal the Great Mountain.

Northward from Darjeeling the view of the Himalaya mountains is inspiring. When the gray clouds break, they reveal crystal ramparts, lifting far to east and west, and a majestic panorama of range beyond range to the blue distance. The primeval forest no longer extends to the snow line. There are bare spots and grain fields and hundreds of tea gardens. But the farther mountains are clothed with great trees and with a tangle of ferns and creepers, bamboos, climbing palms and wild flowers. The hill tribes living in these solitudes are very dissimilar in features, dress and habits, but alike in their half-superstitious awe of their great mountains and in their quiet friendliness. Sometimes a woman from the Himalaya forests appears in the Darjeeling market place, bearing on her back. It may be, a bundle of fagots for fire wood, a burden less beautiful to western eyes than armfuls of scarlet rhododendron blossoms or strange hued orchids would be, but no less precious to the heart of a dweller in a land of unceasing rain.—From "In the Darjeeling Market-Place," by Marietta Neff, in Asia Magazine.

Tara, "Beautiful Hill."

From the coming of Heremon, brehand of Tea, to the desolation of Tara in the Sixteenth century, 120 kings of the Scotic or Milesian stock ruled from their palace on the famous hill. In the annals of the Four Masters we read of the fortieth in the list of Irish kings, the renowned Ollav Fola, who instituted the Feis or assembly of Tara. His real name was Eochy, the title Ollav Fola, or Doctor of Erin, being given him because of his extraordinary learning. The "feis tara" was the national parliament of the Ireland of its day, and met triennially for one week at the period known as Samhaintide (three days before and three days after November day). The meeting was held in the open air in fine weather and in the banqueting hall in wet. This hall was 800 feet long and from 60 to 80 feet wide, and had six or seven large entrances on either side. The site can still be traced.

The last king to reign at Tara was Diarmaid, and no king after him, even when called king of Tara, ever dwelt upon "the beautiful hill."

Girdle Reminder of Ancient Times.

Girdles of metal, adorned with brilliant ornaments, now quite commonly used largely for purposes of ornamentation in women's dress, is a reminder, or the revival of a custom of ancient times, when they were worn by both men and women to confine to the person their long flowing garments. They were not always of metal, but often of linen or leather. The girdle also served as the support of weapons, utensils, bags or pockets, etc. In the Middle ages books were sometimes bound with a strip of flexible stuff hanging from one end of the volume, which could be drawn through the girdle and secured.

Among some people, even in this day, the girdle is put to practical use. Being large and loose, the scrub hard of a sword or long dagger is passed through the girdle instead of being hung from it, a hook or projecting button serving to hold it in place.

Chinese Wear Stoves.

Chinese women wear practically the same clothes in winter as in summer. In the most severe weather, however, they wear heating baskets under their cloaks.

These baskets are plain wicker ones, such as we use for trash. Inside the baskets charcoal warmers are placed. They will radiate heat for hours.

The charcoal is mixed with chemicals that generate oxygen, and thus the charcoal will burn constantly, even though it is sealed in the containers.

Sense of Security.

"I hope some day," remarked Mr. Chuggins, "to give up my flivver and have a private yacht."

"Why do you prefer the yacht?"

"I can go to bed without being disturbed by the fear that some one is going to steal it out of the garage."

Educated.

"Your friend seems rather uncouth. I don't like to leave him alone in the parlor."

"Why not?"

"He may spit on the axminster rug."

"No danger. He never spits on the floor unless there's sawdust."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Not a Live Wire.

Ripp—Can you let me have a few dollars?

Rapp—No. I got fooled a blowout last night and my purse was short-circuited.—New York Sun.

A Sporting Judge.

"Thirty days in the workhouse. That ought to cure you of speeding."

"It certainly will, your honor. Would you like to use my car while I'm in durance vile?"

"No, thanks. I've seen you riding in that old bus of yours. It couldn't do over forty miles an hour."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

TO THE MEN OF AMERICA

(By Rose Trumbull)

You talk of your breed of cattle,
And plan for a higher strain,
You double the food of the pasture,
You heap up the measure of grain;
You draw on the wits of the nation,
To better the barn and the pen;
But what are you doing, my brother,
To better the breed of men?

You boast of your Morgans and Herefords,
Of the worth of a calf or a colt,
And scoff at the scrub and the mongrel,
As worthy a fool or a dolt,
You mention the points of your raster,
With many a "wherefore" and "when,"
But, ah, are you conning, my brothers,
The worth of the children of men?

And what of your boy? Have you measured
His needs for a growing year?
Does your mark as his sire, in his features,
Mean less than your brand on a steer?
Thorobred—that is your watchword,
For stable and pasture and pen;
But what is your word for the homestead?
Answer, you breeders of men!

THE MOTHER'S OPPORTUNITY

"A Christian mother," says W. G. Eliot, "is more to her children in their moral and religious (that is to say, Christian) training than all Sunday Schools, churches, preachers and libraries put together. She alone upon one side, and all the world upon the other, is most likely to prevail. Let her be heartily a Christian woman, her children are almost sure to be Christian. Add to her influence that of the father. Let her gentle persuasions be enforced by his authority, and let both parents thus co-operate with each other, and their children assuredly grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

ASH IS NOT GENUINE TEST

Merely Shows That Cigar Is Well Made, Not That Its Quality Is of the Highest.

Can the quality of a cigar be told by the ash? To a certain extent it can. Many smokers take a great delight in seeing how long the ash will stay on. It is often possible to smoke a big Havana cigar half or three-quarters way through with the ash intact.

But what most cigar smokers fail to realize is that this is the test of a well-manufactured cigar and not necessarily of the tobacco in it. It depends upon the length and neat arrangement of the filling leaf. A well-made, compact cigar has greater consistency than a badly put together one. But it does not follow that the tobacco is better, a tobacco expert writes.

A surer test is when the ash is flicked off. The glowing point should be sharp. The sharper the point the better the cigar.

As regards the ash, it is a common fallacy that white ash is a sign of a fine, and dark ash the sign of an inferior, leaf. The real truth is that the color depends upon the strength of the tobacco.

A very mild and cheap cigar will give a pure white ash. The finest Havana of ripe strength produces a blackish ash. It does not follow that a cigar which burns imperfectly is bad tobacco. You may have lighted it badly or it may be clumsily made.—Brooklyn Eagle.

ELOQUENT TRIBUTE TO TREES

Writer Beautifully Expresses What Every Lover of Nature Must Have at Some Time Felt.

Trees are the arms of Mother Earth lifted up in worship of her makers; where they are, beauty dwells. Trees are the shelter of man, beast and bird; they furnish the roof above us, the shade about us, and the nesting places of love and song. They call children out to play; they entice sweethearts into leafy coverts to seal their vows with fond caresses; they console and gratefully reward old age. They are the fittest ornaments of wealth and the inalienable possession of the poor, who can enjoy them without having title to them. They are the masts that fly the flags of all nations and the sails of all seas; they are the timbers that bridge forbidding streams; they bear the wires of the world's intelligence; they hold the rails that carry the traffic of the continents; they are the carved and polished furnishings of the home; they cradle the young and coffin the dead. Trees herald the spring with glorious banners of leaf and bloom; they clothe the autumn in garments of gold and royal purple; bared to the winter's cold, they are the harp of the winds, and they whisper the music of the infinite spaces.—Clarence Ousley.

Useful Oil.

Few industries have grown so rapidly as the manufacture of cottonseed oil. In 1867 there were only four cottonseed oil mills in the United States; in 1902 there were 618, and by 1920 the value of the oil and the by-products of it were estimated to be $125,000,000. Since then there has been a steady increase in the production.

The increased consumption of cottonseed oil is due largely to the great variety of uses found for it. It enters into the manufacture of lard compounds, butterine and other substitutes for butter; is used in packing and preserving fish, in making salad oils, and in the manufacture of so-called "olive oil." The crude oil is used in medicine, in the preparation of cosmetics, liniments and emulsions; as an illuminating oil in miners' lamps, for rough painting, and for tempering edged tools; and as soap stock, in which field of usefulness, after treatment with certain alkalis, it yields soap, washing powder and glycerin.

The Suffragist.

She was registered for citizenship class for the first time and she was full of enthusiasm for her party. Unfortunately, she was very deaf and the usual questions were somewhat hard to understand. "Age? Born in this country? Color? What state?" Fumblingly she got them all, but "occupation?" she could not grasp. "Are you a housewife?" roared the impatient girl behind the desk. "No," replied the deaf but earnest suffragist. "Second wife."

Totally Obscured.

A certain callow Chicago swain had an amazingly large mouth which he contorted into an all-pervading smile when he wished to make a good impression. His sweetie had persuaded him to "ask father" and the youth was determined to show himself to good advantage.

"Mister Jones," he began, stretching his principal feature to the utmost of geniality, "I have come to ask for the hand of your daughter, I—"

"Just a moment, young man," interrupted the old gentleman mildly, "would you mind closing your mouth for a moment till I see who you are."—American Legion Weekly.

Makeup of Human Body.

One reason why milk is so excellent a food is that it contains much calcium, which is the principal mineral of the human body, contributing to the makeup of the bones and teeth. A grown person carries in his skeleton about four pounds of it, says an exchange. The body contains about three ounces of sodium, combined with chlorine to form common salt. There are also about two ounces of magnesium, which is a silvery-white metal. Another highly inflammable metal contained in the body is potassium—about two and one-half ounces of it. The body contains about 55 ounces of phosphorus. Seven-eighths of the phosphorus is in the bones (going to form phosphate of lime); half an ounce is in the brain tissues; the rest is in the red corpuscles of the blood. Of sulphur there are about four ounces in the bones and teeth. The body is three-fifths water and one-fifth carbon.

Black Hawk in Boston.

For some years Black Hawk lived quietly on a small reservation near Des Moines. In 1837 the peace-loving Keokuk took him with a party of Sauk and Fox chiefs again to Washington, and on this trip he made a visit to Boston. The officials of the city received the august warrior and his companions in Faneuil hall, and the governor of the commonwealth paid them similar honor at the statehouse. Some war-dances were performed on the Common for the amusement of the populace, and afterward the party was taken to see a performance by Edwin Forrest at the Tremont theater. Here all went well, except that at an exciting point in the play the Indians burst into a warwhoop, to the considerable consternation of the women and children present.—Frederic Austin Ogg.

Intelligence of Elephants.

Elephants are extraordinarily intelligent, even in their wild state, but it is an astonishing fact that with all this intelligence the males will invariably permit the approach of human beings (on the right side of the wind) to within 20 or 30 yards with the utmost unconcern. It is on this account many hunters believe that they are blind to anything at close quarters.

This opinion, however, is discounted by the fact that the females, particularly if they are with young, get very curious, and more often than not investigate matters, and if they do, do so with trunk aloft, head and ears back, and a "get-out-of-the-way-I'm-coming" toot which beats anything in the jungle.

If records of Franklin County common pleas court mean anything there are almost twice as many erring husbands in the county as there are undutiful wives.

A report compiled by County Clerk Harold C. Gockenbach shows that of 100 divorce cases filed during December, 62 were brought by women as against only 38 by men.

Willful absence and gross neglect were alleged in 76 of the 100 cases. Eight women alleged their husbands were extremely cruel and three men admittd their wives ruled unmercifully in their homes.

Not a single case was founded on habitual drunkenness.

Tall Mountains.

At least 60 mountains in California rise more than 13,000 feet above sea level, but they stand amid a wealth of mountain scenery so rich and varied that they are not considered sufficiently noteworthy to be named, according to the United States geological survey, Department of the Interior. Yet if any one of these unnamed mountain peaks were in the eastern part of the United States it would be visited annually by millions of people. But California has several additional mountain peaks more than 13,000 feet high that have been named, or 120 in all, as well as a dozen that rise above 14,000 feet.

MIGHTY RIVER IS THE YUKON

Ranks as One of the World's Greatest, Though It Was Long Comparatively Unknown.

The Yukon is one of the great rivers of the world. It is more than 2,800 miles long and is both the longest and the largest river flowing into Pacific waters in the western hemisphere, surpassing by a considerable margin its nearest competitors, the Columbia and the Colorado. Among all the rivers of North America the Yukon is surpassed in length only by the Mississippi system and the Mackenzie. It is longer than the St. Lawrence, as well as all the other rivers except the Mississippi system which flows into the Gulf of Mexico or the Atlantic.

The existence of such a large river as the Yukon in the Far North was long unsuspected. A Russian lieutenant, Zagoskin, entered its mouth by boat in 1842 and traversed it for several hundred miles. The Hudson's Bay company had discovered its headwaters in Canada; but the two bits of information were not pieced together. The existence of the river as a stream of great magnitude and length first became really known through the daring and romantic project of installing land telegraph wires between America and Europe across Alaska, Behring strait and the wastes of Siberia. Robert Kennicott, in connection with this enterprise blazed the Yukon trail by descending the river in 1865. The first trading steamer ascended the stream in 1869. The Yukon really came into its own with the discovery of gold in the Klondike in 1896.—Bulletin of National Geographical Society.

HAD HIGH RANK AS HUMORIST

William Evarts "One of the Wittiest Men I Ever Met," Asserted Chauncey M. Depew.

"William M. Evarts was the wittiest man I ever met," writes Chauncey M. Depew in Scribner's magazine. "It is difficult to rehabilitate in the sayings of a wit the complete flavor of the utterance. It is easier with a man of humor.

"Evarts was very proud of his efforts as a farmer on his large estate in Vermont. Among his prizes was a drove of pigs. He sent to Chief Justice Morrison R. Waite a copy of his eulogy on Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, Waite's predecessor, and at the same time a ham, saying in his letter: 'My dear chief justice, I send you today one of my prize hams and also my eulogy on Chief Justice Chase, both the products of my pen.'

"The good things Mr. Evarts said would be talked of long after a dinner. I remember on one occasion his famous partner, Mr. Choate, who was a Harvard man, while Evarts was a graduate from Yale, introduced Mr. Evarts by saying that he was surprised that a Yale man, with all the prejudices of that institution against the superior advantages of Harvard, should have risked the coats of his stomach at a Harvard dinner. Mr. Evarts replied: 'When I go to a Harvard dinner I always leave the coats of my stomach at home.'"

IGNORANCE HARD TO CREDIT

Superstitious Belief Almost Cost Woman in German Village Her Life, It Is Reported.

To cast the devil out of a woman living in a village of the Lausaburger district of Pomerania, Germany, three hags tortured her. She appears to have been of a sour and somewhat hysterical disposition and three of the village gossips came to the conclusion that her feelings were due to diabolical possession and resolved to effect a cure by means of ancient enchantments known by them, it is reported. They first of all gathered the herbs needed for the purpose in the forests at the proper conjunction of the stars. Then a tripod was formed of three chairs and to these the patient was bound. Beneath her was placed a pail of redhot coal on which the herbs were scattered. As the fumes of the burning weeds veiled the victim the three hags croned the prescribed enchantment. The louder the woman shrieked the loudee they sang, and after the process had been continued long enough to prove effective they ran away, believing the devil would run out of the woman after them. She, however, continued to shriek. Her cries were heard by a man who came to the rescue

QUOTATIONS HOARY WITH AGE

Many of the Most Familiar Sayings Have Been in Use for Five Hundred Years.

"All's well that ends well," you say, and you are quoting from a book of tales a little matter of 500 years old; i. e., the "Gesta Romanorum," first printed about 1473.

To Geoffrey Chaucer, "well of English undefyled," who was born in 1328, we owe a multitude of our most frequently used proverbs, including "Many a small maketh a great," "Of two evils choose the lesser," "All is not gold that glitters," "Out of sight, out of mind," "Man proposes and God disposes."

Between Chaucer's time and the day of Shakespeare some of our most familiar saws were born. "Look ere ye leap," "Strike while the iron is hot," "Never look a gift horse in the mouth," "Beggars should be no choosers," "You can bring a horse to water," etc.; "A new broom sweeps clean," "Small pitchers have wide ears," "One swallow maketh not a summer," "It's an ill wind blows no one good," "Enough is as good as a feast," "What's bred in the bone," etc.; "Comparisons are odious." These are a few that came to light later than Chaucer, but before Shakespeare was born in 1564.

If you haven't read faithfully from the Bard of Avon you may not be aware that the following proverbs are found in his works: "Familiarity breeds contempt," "What's mine is yours," etc.; "Every why hath a wherefor," "It is a wise father knoweth his own child," "Good wine needs no bush," "Married in haste, repent at leisure," "Give the devil his due," "All the world's a stage," "Some are born great, some achieve greatness," etc.

CHINA REAL LAND OF CASTE

Conditions There Declared by Travelers to Outclass Even Those Existing in East India

Chinamen have more caste even than the East Indians. They say you never find one Chinaman in a low condition of life but you will find him employing another Chinaman in a still lower condition. The small Chinese farmer employs a servant, to whom he is lord and master. This menial is compelled to serve him in any capacity that may be required. For instance, when the small Chinese farmer takes a pig to market he does not do it as the Irishman does, by driving the pig along the road. No, he first kills the pig, or makes his "hired man" do it. Then the pig is carefully packed on one side of a single wheeled vehicle something like a wheelbarrow. The weight of the proprietor may just balance that of the pig, but if it is greater, then a few boulders are added to even things up. The whole apparatus is then wheeled along the road by the hired man, the Chinese proprietor meanwhile placidly smoking his pipe.

WHISKERS IN ANCIENT EGYPT

Believed to Have Been Introduced Into Country By Horsemen Who Came From Asia.

What could have been the explanation of black, bushy whiskers on an ancient Egyptian? Historically, socially, customarily, they did not belong there, and yet, thus accoutered lay the occupant of one of the tombs in the Theban necropolis which the Metropolitan museum's expedition at that place chanced to excavate. He was named Atefamon, "Charioteer to the General," and in his coffin they found his whip, broken into three pieces, and tied up in its own lash. Now, in his day, T. E. Winlock explains, horses and chariots had long been used in Egypt, but it was still remembered that they had first come from Asia, and probably the best horses and the most skillful drivers were aliens. The Asiatics always wore beards, and so this Egyptian charioteer, to be in the height of fashion, imitated them. "It makes me think of the days of horses and carriages in this country," adds the archeologist, "when the most stylish coachmen were English, and so those of Yankee birth copied the English side whiskers."—New York Evening Post.

Whaling Customs of Eskimos.

The Eskimos of the Arctic have strange customs. It has proved difficult to convert them to the ways of the white man. Of the practical arts of the latter, the natives have adopted whale boats and firearms. The methods of hunting are their own.

When a whale is captured the boats of the hunters assemble at the scene as quickly as they can. The boats are lined out, with sails up, each towing the other, the dead whale bringing up the rear, and the slow voyage homeward is begun.

When the whaling season is over, each successful hunter gives a nalu-ka-tuk (celebration), with the rest of the villagers as his guests. There is feasting, blanket tossing, and a dance at the end of the program, which often lasts for days. All the old men and women, and the sick Eskimos, are guests of the prince of the whale hunt. Those not able to walk are carried by the men or hauled on sleds to that part of the village selected for the feast lincolns birthday is today. I can tell you something about him. He was a little boy like me. But I aint a little boy am I. He was a President. He was a Postmaster. abraham lincoln never went to school. He was a store keeper. He was a farmer. He was 56 years old when he died. He was a captain in Black Hawk war. He was a Lawyer. He was a President during the civil war. He freed the Slaves. He had a assassinted by John wilkes Booth. He was a good man to. He helped a little pig out of the mud, when he Had His Best Close on him. He Helped his own little dog out of the crick. He took his stockings of to get the little dog out of the river. wasn't he a good man though. John wilkes Booth shot him in the show. He terned around to look at something and He shot him. aint that to bad aint it. He was a mighty good President. He saw a man that was sick in Bed. he saith to this man pick up your bed and walk, and he said go to the river and bathe yourself seven times he did and it maid him well. and that is the last of the story. and that shows what a President done.

FAD TRACED TO DUTCHMAN

Diplomat of Holland Said to Have First Worn Monocle at the Congress of Vienna.

Several explanations have been given as to why the monocle was. Sir Horace Rumbold wrote that the fashion of wearing it was introduced at the congress of Vienna—a congress which remade the map of Europe back in the last century. He told that it was a Dutch "exquisite"—which is the diplomatic language for "dude"—one Jonkheer Brecle, who was the first man to wear a monocle, and he showed this brand new fad to the diplomats and their followers assembled at Vienna. After that introduction the fad spread to all parts of Europe, but took its strongest grip on England.

Toward the end of the first quarter of the Nineteenth century the fad of wearing a monocle had become so popular that a writer of a book on the care of the eyes and the preservation of the vision inveighed against it. The name of the writer was Dr. Kitchiner, and in 1823 he published this book, the title of which was "Economy of the Eyes." Referring to monocle he wrote: "A single glass, set in a smart ring, is often used by trinket fanciers for fashion's sake. These folks have not the least defect in their sight and are not aware of the mischievous consequences of such irritation."

PRIZE MOST EAGERLY SOUGHT

The grand prix de Rome is a prize awarded by the French government yearly for the best work in sculpture, painting, music and architecture. The competition is confined to French subjects over 15 and under 30 years of age, and consists of four years of art study, three of which are spent at the Villa Medicis at Rome, and the fourth in traveling through Italy and Greece, all expenses paid by the government. Candidates are selected by competitive examinations conducted by the Ecole des Beaux Arts, under the direction of the minister of fine arts.

Those who pass the entrance examinations are placed "en loge" for a period of several weeks, explains the Detroit News. This means that the student is locked up in a private studio, during which time he is not permitted to see any one or even talk to the servant. The only recreation given is a half-hour walk daily in the grounds. During this time he is expected to prepare something finally to be passed upon by the authorities.

Wild Turkey Stupid Bird.

A pen built on logs and inclosed on every side and roofed, the only entrance being an opening beneath the bottom log on one side, is all that is necessary to entrap the otherwise wary and watchful wild turkey. The birds, eagerly following a luring train of corn, are led along to the pen and up through the opening under the log and into the pen. The instant a turkey finds itself in the pen it knows it has got itself into a scrape and seeks to escape, but it pays no attention to the opening in the log by which it entered, and persistently dashes around the pen, its head in the air, looking upward for a place to get out.

The old-time pen-trapping turkey hunter never had any anxiety about his game escaping from the trap, and he had only to wait a sufficient time to find it filled with the foolish birds, all with their necks stretched full length, looking for a place in the roof through which to take wing, and ignoring the big opening under the log that let them in.

Mayor Elected in a Belfry.

Brightlingsea, a pretty little town on the coast of Sussex, England, not to be confused with Brightheimstone, now known as Brighton, is a law unto itself in the election of a mayor. Other cities and towns may choose their chief magistrate on November 9; Brightlingsea prefers December 5, and carries out the old-time ceremony in the belfry of the parish church. The mayor of Brightlingsea is no ordinary mayor, he is a deputy of the Cinque Ports (just as the lord mayor of London is admiral of the port of London) and he has six assistants, each of whom cheerfully pays a "fine" of 4s. for the privilege of "aiding the liberty of Brightlingsea," and possibly in collecting the 10s. which Brightlingsea has paid to Sandwich every year these last five centuries. Some day a very courageous mayor of Brightlingsea, elected in the belfry, will announce by bob major that he intends to get rid of the debt by payment of a lump sum.

Valuable Eucalyptus.

The extraordinary usefulness of the eucalyptus has probably done more than its beauty to bring about its rapidly increasing cultivation. Used as fuel, the wood burns very rapidly but with a bright, clear flame, throwing out much heat because of the large amount of oil it contains. The hundred or more species of the tree provide a wide variety of timbers, some of which are already extensively used for furniture making, house construction and even shipbuilding. The great strength and durability of the wood is more remarkable when one considers its lightness and its rapidity of growth. Even in tanning and paper-making it has been found useful. We may expect, then, that the small plantations now to be seen everywhere in Southern California will rapidly increase in size and number.

He Paid the Note.

A certain shiftless character had borrowed some money at the bank after having been secured by a hard-working man. Notice was sent; no response. A second notice was sent, but no response. And a third with similar results. Whereupon the guarantor was told to come in and take up the note. Seeing the maker of the note on the street, he asked:

"Didn't you know that note was due?"

Getting an affirmative reply, he further asked:

"Why didn't you take it up?"

This time the shiftless one made reply:

"Didn't you expect to pay it?"

"No!"

"Well, what did you sign it for if you didn't expect to pay it?"

There was no recourse from this question, that's the way it usually stacks up, so the guarantor took up the note and credited the sum to experience.—Farm Life.

How Fruit Worm Gets Into Apple.

Did you ever find a worm away in the core of an apple when there wasn't any sign of a hole on the outside to show where it got in? Well, in the spring, says the Ave Maria, when the trees are all in blossom and look their loveliest, a little moth slipped out of its chrysalis and flew among the blossoms. Then, when the petals of the flowers had fallen, the moth laid an egg in the upturned cup made by the five points of the calyx. In a short time the tiny egg hatched into a small worm, and the little worm bored its way into the apple that was just forming; and there it grew with the apple, meanwhile feeding on it. When the apple falls to the ground, the worm gets out and finds its way into the tree, where it spins a cocoon, from which another moth is hatched the next spring, and so on. The birds search for these fruit worms in the bark of the trees.

A Genial Heckler.

"I was driving along a rough country road the other day," said Lloyd George during an electioneering tour, "and at the foot of a steep hill I saw the signboard, 'Please Slacken the Reins Going Up the Hill.' While reading this it occurred to me that it might be well for people generally to be as kind and considerate in their treatment of their minister as they are of their horses, especially when the load is heavy and the road is steep."

There was a burst of applause from the audience, which appreciated the point of the premier's illustration, but the inevitable wag was present, and he piped up, "Why not try a flivver, Georgie?"

MONEY IS WELL EXPENDED

Substantial Truth in Statement That Courtesy Is Worth All the Expenditure Involved.

Just as we have absorbed the information from one writer that courtesy should play a prominent part in every business transaction because it costs nothing, we ran across a bulletin of the Standard Oil company of California which states that $1,000,000 was invested in telegraph tolls last year to transmit a single word—"Please."

So courtesy does cost something, the Philadelphia Record observes. If we had several months to spend in research we might find the basis for an estimate that courtesy in newspaper advertising alone costs several million dollars. But whatever the cost, it is worth it.

Courtesy, cordiality and sincerity are three big factors in the success of an advertisement. People like to do business with dealers whose messages radiate good will, a friendly spirit, a desire to please. During the recent holiday rush some stores suggested that the purchasers should carry small packages home with them instead of having them delivered. The proposal was put forward in the same way in which one asks a favor of a friend, and it proved very effective. Suppose the stores had said, instead: "Positively, no small packages delivered"—can you imagine the result?

The money that the business men of the country spend on "please" in their advertising and elsewhere, is an investment that yields handsome cash dividends. One might as well try to run a gasoline motor without oil as to dispense with this courtesy lubricant that does away with friction in the contacts of human relationship.

FIT MATE FOR FAMOUS SCOUT

Wife of "Buffalo Bill" Frequently Accompanied Him on Expeditions Filled With Danger.

Louisa Smith's first encounter with William Frederick Cody, later and more popularly known as "Buffalo Bill," was exceedingly informal. Cody had been brought to the Smith home by a mutual friend and before he had even been introduced was the astonished recipient of a resolute slap on the mouth from Louisa, a punishment which soon grew into love. Their marriage took place shortly after and their life together was extremely happy.

Mrs. Cody proved an ideal wife for "Buffalo Bill." She was with him on a great many of his trips and enjoyed them as much as he did himself. Intrepid and daring, there was no expedition which appeared too dangerous for her to go on.

Mrs. Cody outlived her husband, as well as all of her children, and the latter part of her life, spent in retirement in the West, was lived in a dream world, populated by her loved ones.

Adorable Shams.

In the course of a lecture on "Early English Renaissance Architecture and Some Practical Considerations," which R. P. Oglesby delivered, the lecturer remarked that "sham" was not a nice word; but the outer dome of St. Paul's cathedral was an adorable sham. Wren said: "I am going to give you a beautiful dome outside, and an appropriate dome inside, and what they are made of, or how they support my stone lantern and cross, weighing 700 tons, is my business and nobody else's." Neither of the domes in any way supported the lantern. The upper portions of the interior of St. Peter's at Rome were, he added, shams—cleverly decorated to look like marble. Most of the great Palladio's best works at Vicenza and other places was sham—merely stucco laid on brickwork, but none the less beautiful in form; and our own architect Nash introduced stucco into London, as in Regent street and elsewhere.—London Times

Iceland in History.

A visitor to Iceland has described the view from the plateau overlooking the plain of Thingvellir, where the parliament of the commonwealth was held. He speaks of magnificent gorges, rivers, waterfalls, of a lake of sapphire set within a circle of emerald hills and snow-capped mountains, altogether a picture of enchanting beauty. The magnificence of its historical and literary traditions have enriched the ages, and some of their Icelandic translations are now being adopted by other nations. The spoken language of today differs so little from that of the Twelfth century that the Sagas of that time continue to be, in the original text, the daily reading of all classes. The remarkable revival of art and literature and general prosperity has come from the reawakening of the national spirit early in the Nineteenth century.

Queer Earthquake Prank.

An earthquake that shook India not so long ago was remarkable for the curiously distorting effects it produced on standing objects. Similar effects have been noticed from other earthquakes, but seldom to so striking an extent. In an official report in the matter it is described how this earthquake twisted a lofty monument at Chatak. The monument was an obelisk of brick, coated with plaster, more than sixty feet tall and twelve feet square at the base. About six feet of the top was broken off and thrown to the east. Then a piece twenty feet in height was separated twenty-three feet above the ground and twisted in a direction opposite to the motion of the hands of a watch, but without falling.

Pithy Paragraphs.

There are some who say that ideals are but elusive phantoms—mere will o'-the-wisps of fancy. They scoff at them, but their scoffing is only a mask. —Crawford C. McCullough.

Diplomats cannot make international peace. All they can do is to embody in definite form such spirit of peace as already exists or can be created in their several communities.—Lyman Abbott.

The struggle for business success has often been so unrelenting that men have forgotten the dream children of their boyhood days, have dissipated a priceless legacy, and, at last, having arrived at the goal of material success, find themselves penniless in all that matters—penniless in companionship, friendship and love. —Crawford C. McCullough.

The cherry tree story finds no place in standard biographies, while had Washington never told a lie the British would have got him early in the war.—James H. Collins.

Hilltop Bank Robbery

"I've come to make a little call on you."

"You've got the advantage of me, I don't know you."

"You had the advantage of me about 10:20 this morning."

This was part of a little conversation that passed back and forth through the cell bars at the city prison Tuesday night, as Mr. Jean W. Worrell stood before the cell of Harry. Lutz to identify him as one of the bandits who held up the Hilltop Bank Tuesday morning.

Five hours after bandits Tuesday held up the bank police had three of the robbers in custody and had recovered nearly half of the loot.

Of the $3011.23 cash $6700 Liberty bonds and $53,735 in nonnegotiable notes obtained by the robbers, police have recovered $1244 cash, $2100 Liberty bonds and $3500 in notes, identified by Jean W. Worrell, 107 S. Terrace Ave., manager of the bank. Worrell also identified the men held as being the trio which entered the bank and actually staged the holdup.

Those in custody are:

James Dunlap, 36, who refused police his permanent address.

Charles Provence, 32, 522 W. Fourth Ave., who is said to be a brother-in-law of George "Red" McGahan, much-wanted gun man and bank robber.

George Richmond, 29, who has been living at 80 Avondale Ave., he told police. Richmond, however, was identified by Bertillon Superintendent Scully as Harry Lutz of Chicago.

Credit for bringing about the arrest of the trio goes largely to the quick wit of Patrolman Thomas C. Alkire, West Side substation officer, who lives at 275 Dakota Ave. Alkire owns the house at 271 Dakota Ave. where the bandit gang was captured.

Several weeks ago, Alkire said, he became suspicious when he saw a large machine ston several times at late hours at the Dakota Ave. house. He noted the tag number and, when the number on the bandits' car was given out to police yesterday, notified Chief French, and the raid on the thugs' rendezvous followed.

When police approached, Dunlap rushed from a rear door. Detectives Anderson, Scully and Spencer halted him with drawn guns. Behind him were Provence and Richmond, who went back and slammed shut the door. Reinforcements followed, and the place was surrounded. A search was made of the house, but the hiding men could not be found.

Crouching behind boxes piled at the opening he found Richmond and Provence. He pulled them out and called to Detectives Gaston and Creeden for assistance. Covered with dirt Alkire found a roll of currency and notes. He also recovered two guns, one an automatic, partly covered with dirt.

At city prison the trio was grilled at length, but refused to divulge information concerning other crimes of which they are suspected. Included in them was the holdup, Dec. 21, of the Steelton branch of the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank, 1902 Parsons Ave., where $7936.35 in cash was taken. Provence, police say, resembles the foreigner participating in the stickup.

The holdup happened shortly after 10 o'clock. Worrell was telephoning when the trio entered and Dunlap and Richmond grabbed his arms, pinning them down. Before him lay two pistols on a desk, but he couldn't reach them. At an adding machine Miss Iris Clover of Rome was working, and Kermit Althoff, bookkeeper, 847 S. High St., was near the rear of the banking room, handling checks.

Worrell put up his hands and Dunlap dashed for Miss Clover, jerking her off a chair to the floor. Then he turned his gun toward Althoff, ordering him into a rear room. Richmond told Worrell to follow, emphasizing his orders by jabbing the manager in the back with his gun.

Richmond then took up position as guard over them. Meanwhile Dunlap and Provence gathered the loot and called finally to Richmond to follow as they left.

Noticing the trio run and board the waiting auto, parked across the street and headed south in Park Ave., B. E. Wolf, 72 S. Eureka Ave., a depositor, hurried into the bank. He realized the holdup at a glance and returned to his own machine, giving chase though some distance behind. The bandit car outsped his, but he was able to obtain the license numbers, which he furnished police. To Mr. Wolfe is given much commendation for his part in obtaining identification of the tag number, taking a chance at being shot at the time. The bank is insured for $100,000 against robbery and holdup, therefore there is no fear whatever of anyone losing money that has been deposited there. Shortly after the holdup, the auto dashed through a signal block of Traffic Officer Murphy at High and Long Sts. Murphy registered the tag numbers, intending later to arrest the driver. Upon reporting to headquarters he learned of the holdup, and the numbers corresponded.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT AND SYMPATHY.

To the memory of our dear sister Lydia Tucker, whose death occurred at her home, 1990 West Broad St., Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 12 1922.

Once again the links are broken and our sister has gone from this world of suffering and sorrow to her immortal home.

To her relatives and friends who were nearest and dearest our deepest sympathy is expressed.

May He who giveth all good things;
Whose love excelleth all,
Give you the courage that sustains
Whatever may befall.
In this your sorrow may you feel
His presence ever near
To comfort, heal, sustain and bless,
Till brighter days appear.

Sister Tucker had been a member of B. F. Allen Rebekah Lodge No. 752 since April 2nd, 1916. Her fraternal sisters and brothers feel deeply the loss they have sustained.

Therefore be it resolved that we send a copy of this resolution to the bereaved husband and to our local paper, also that our charter be draped in respect to her memory for the period of thirty days.

Everyone knows the story which is told of Cleopatra to illustrate her luxurious habits of living—namely, that she dissolved in her wine a precious pearl. No one seems to have questioned what must have been the effect upon the drink, but one scientist, at least, questions pointedly the possibility of such a solution.

Do we not all believe that the magnificent Cleopatra, regardless of expense, dissolved in her wine cup a pearl of great price, as if it had been a lump of sugar? Is not the "fact" familiar to every one? Yet, if you test it, you will find the fact to be that pearls are not soluble in wine. The most powerful vinegar attacks but very slowly and never entirely dissolves them, for the organic matter remains behind, in the shape of a spongy mass larger than the original pearl.

A Damp Feel.

Talking about "getting work out of a husband," in a certain family there is a saying, "I wish you would do this while you are wet." A woman whose husband was very good about helping about the house had been imposed upon until it came to the last straw, when he was driven in from a hard day's work in the field in the rain.

When he reached the house his wife met him with, "While you are wet" do this, and "while you are wet" do that.

After she had kept him going for some time she ordered him to get a bucket of water "While he was wet."

He did, and when he came back with it he threw it on her and said: "Now you do something while you are wet."
—Los Angeles Times.

Wolseley and Gordon.

There was nothing that Wolseley loved better than to recount the adventure of his seeing Gordon off to the Soudan on November 18, 1883, and his dramatic conversation at the London railway station, says Edmund Gosse, in an appreciation of Lord Wolseley. Gordon was settled in the train when Wolseley asked: "By the way, general, I suppose you have plenty of money?" "Not a penny!" And Wolseley, adds Mr. Gosse, would recount how he dashed in a hansom to his bank, and brought back the banknotes just in time for the indifferent Gordon to slip them into his pocket as the train went off.

LOOKING AFTER THE CATTLE

Not Alone in Poorer Districts of Ireland Are Animals Sheltered With the Family.

It is well known that the pigs belonging to the poorer peasants in the villages of Ireland are practically "members of the family." The house is to all intents and purposes their rightful lodging and eating quarters.

Ireland, however, is not the only country in which one may find live stock indoors, as in the outlying villages in the northern part of Russia the family cow (nearly every household owns one) is under shelter for eight months out of every twelve, says London Answers.

The whole countryside is a mass of snow for months on end, and 40 to 50 degrees below zero is not uncommon; so the poor beasts have to be cooped up. They are fed—or, rather, nearly starved, on senna grass, collected and stored by the Russians during the short summer, and they emerge when the snow has disappeared very thin indeed.

Although living in the same habitation as their owners, they are allotted a separate apartment. The chickens are also sheltered in the living and sleeping rooms and are "hutched" in the fireplace.

The fire actually is about two and a half feet above the level of the floor, and with a few thin pieces of wood the aperture underneath is easily converted into a cozy place for the fowls in the winter.

In the village in the Nile district, where the houses have flat tops, the natives make use of the roofs to "house" their smaller live stock, such as sheep, goats and poultry.

STILL LIVE IN "STONE AGE"

Film Party in New Guinea Discovers People Who Are Interesting Relics of the Past.

Adventures in the wilds of New Guinea were experienced by a film party in a small motor launch, the Wattle. The expedition cruised along the coast of New Guinea, three times grounding on uncharted reefs, and each time the hydrographic staff carefully corrected the charts carried. A week or so later a storm picked up the Wattle and impaled it on a coral spur. After unwelcome labor in a shade temperature of 104 degrees the launch was refloated. In one place the visitors found that the people were still in the Neolithic age, stone axes and adzes being in general use. The camera expert was interested in the weaving of cloth by the natives. A special tree was selected and cut down with a stone adze. The bark was beaten and loosened, turned inside out and placed in the sun to dry. Then it was soaked in water and again dried. Finally it was cut into lengths with a sharpened flat stone like a chisel. The journey up the Ramu river, in New Guinea, was rendered difficult by the hidden logs and sometimes only four and one-half miles were covered in the day. Sixty days were spent in that river, the Wattle pushing up about 170 miles.

Albania Defied Sultan.

In the 25 years that Amureth II was Sultan of Turkey, he conquered two empires, 12 kingdoms and 500 cities; but there was one little kingdom, lying at his very door, which for a quarter of a century successfully defied and resisted Turkish Mohammedism and gave Amureth II more trouble than all his other enemies combined. The kingdom was Albania.

John Gratiot, leader of the Albanians, repelled 20 separate invasions of the sultan's army. All in all, nearly 1,000,000 Turkish soldiers were dispatched to conquer the little country which was protected at no time by more than 80,000 Albanians. The Turks suffered frightful losses.

At last after 25 years of the most stubborn resistance recorded by history, Albania yielded, but not till Gratiot himself had been harvested by the inevitable grim reaper.

Master of Style.

The truth of the matter is, that neither he who is a fop in the world is a fit man to be alone, nor he who has set his heart much upon the world, though he has never so much understanding; so that solitude can be well fitted and sit right but upon a very few persons. They must have enough knowledge of the world to see the vanity of it, and enough virtue to despise all vanity; if the mind be possessed with any lust or passions, a man had better be in a fair than in a wood alone. They may, like petty thieves, cheat us perhaps and pick our pockets in the midst of company, but like robbers they use to strip and bind or murder us, when they catch us alone. This is but to retreat from men to fall into the hands of devils.

GREAT MAN FIRST "DUNCE"

Term Has Come Down to Us in the Present Day in a Somewhat Roundabout Manner.

If you should ever be called a "dunce," don't feel insulted. Just show your superiority by springing this interesting bit of information. He who made the term famous was a great man. He was considered one of the most learned doctors of the early church and of the Franciscan order. His name was Duns Scotus, and though he was dunce by name he was not by nature, as he was renowned for his sharpness and keenness. The present significance of the word "dunce," derived from the name "Duns," is the result of ancient theological disputes.

Away back in the Middle ages the churchmen who had been educated in the schools founded by Charlemagne were considered the savants of their age and were respected for their great learning. The time soon came, however, when these theologians were no longer regarded as authorities and when their writings became unpopular because of the ponderous and scholarly style in which they were expressed. Among such theologians, called "schoolmen," Duns Scotus was a prominent representative and leader. Consequently when a follower of his expounded theories or quoted from the works of the "schoolmen," he was told, "O, you are a Duns," which implied, "Old stuff, my boy, entirely too dull to be modern." Hence we have the word "dunce," meaning dull, heavy, dense.

ARE ATTRACTED BY "MOVIES"

Fierce Tribe of South America Brought Into Subjection Through Magic of White Man.

During the three centuries after the conquest of Peru, Spanish missionaries penetrated all parts of South America, but were never able to gain headway among the wild tribes of what is known as the Gran Chaco, or northern Argentina and western Paraguay, an exchange explains.

These tribes, belonging to what is known as the Chaco-Guaycurau family of Indians, were described by the early Spaniards as ferocious and irreconcilable, with an intense hatred of the white man. They were restless nomads, who lived by hunting and fishing. Only within the last twenty years have they allowed the white man to advance his settlements and then only because of fear of the Argentine army.

One sugar plantation and mill employs over 2,000 of these Indians. But they still keep to themselves and persist in their own customs. They live apart in "toldos," or reed huts; dye and tattoo their skins and adhere to their ancient ceremonies. They have formed a great liking for the American moving pictures, however. At one plantation a moving picture show is provided at the Indian village every Saturday night, and, although they understand neither English nor Spanish, the Indians squat on the ground and follow the actors with many grunts in their guttural language. The American cowboy actors are their favorites.

Waste Not.

Mother always cuts Peggy's hair, and as she was about to clear the clippings away the little girl stopped her.

"Mother, you're not going to throw my hair away, are you?"

"Yes, my dear. What's the good of keeping it?"

"Why, can't you make it grow on grandpa's head? He's got no hair at all."—London Answers.

Power of Oratory.

"Do you believe in the value of advertising?"

"Certainly," replied the eminent statesman. "Without the publicity given the American flag by patriots who want to serve it—for a consideration—it wouldn't mean half as much to some people as it does now."—Birmingham Age Herald.

MYSTERY IN STREET LAMP

One in London Apparently Has Power to Light Up and Extinguish Itself.

At Streatham, near London, that pretty suburb where Doctor Johnson spent many days at the house of his friends, the Thales, an experiment has lately been made that would have interested the controversialist and probably caused him to rattle his stick furiously and declare that lamps do not light themselves.

The people of Streatham nowadays take things more quietly and probably their only observation on this particular occasion was that the lamp had just had a new coat of paint, was making a curious ticking sound, and with that they ceased to think on the matter until at dusk, without further warning the streets leap into brilliant light. The ticking lamp-post continued its illumination until dawn appeared, when just as mysteriously as the light had burst forth it went out; self-lighting and self-extinguishing.

It is just as well that Boswell was not able to tackle the doctor upon the subject and record in his invaluable notebook the irate answers to his exasperating and in the case of the self governing lamp endless questions.

DOLPHIN GIFTED BY NATURE

Rarely Beautiful in Coloring, and Believed to Be the Speediest of All Fishes.

Of the game fishes the dolphin must be mentioned in the front rank, says a writer in the National Geographic Magazine. There is probably no other citizen of the deep which travels so swiftly. It spends its entire life in the open sea. While idling, its movements are sluggish, but when in quest of its prey it moves with incredible rapidity, and to one observing its movements it appears like nothing so much as a dash of color in the sea—a yellow-blue-whitish streak that is almost lost in the green water.

Of all deep-water fishes, the dolphin possesses the greatest power to change its color. A dying dolphin affords a most beautiful and spectacular sight, when, with all the iridescence of an opal, it changes hue so rapidly that the brain can not grasp the beauty of one color before another comes into view. In life its general color is a blue or emerald green above, with brighter blue dots showing on the base; the under parts are silvery and the caudal and pectoral fins are a clear yellow.

Animals "Pretend to Die."

Some animals can pretend to be dead when they imagine they are going to be hurt or taken into captivity.

A good example of this is seen in the American hog-nosed snake. This is a small reptile about three and a half feet in length, which has a shovel-shaped snout.

It is perfectly harmless, but many people have thought it to be most dangerous, because, when it is alarmed it raises its head and expands the skin folds on its neck—in imitation of a cobra.

If, however, no notice is taken of this performance, it pretends to be dead, writhing its body about as in convulsions. Lastly, it rolls over on its back and remains perfectly motionless until the intruder is gone.

The Australian dingo dog is another expert at feigning death. Mr. W. S Berridge, F. Z. S., in "Marvels of the Animal World," tells of a "dead" dingo dog that was taken into a hut to be skinned.

This dog kept up its pretense of death and allowed a portion of the skin to be taken off before it moved and gave the game away.

Caterpillar Parade.

One day over in France a soldier noticed a cord of soft brown chenille striped with red in the white road. He writes about it in the Christian Science Monitor. "I stopped to examine it, attracted by the color," he continues, "and found a living line of velvety caterpillars. There were fifty two of them. Head to tail in a curving row they were all moving in one direction downhill.

"A cart passed by. The vibrations made by the wheels broke the lineup into tiny zig-zags. Each caterpillar lost touch with his neighbor and moved aside in slantwise fashion. Quickly, however, they rejoined and took up their forward journey." The onlooker inquired, and was told that the march of the caterpillars was a common thing in France. "They build their nests in the pines, and when they have need of a new feeding ground they all move down the trees and march away."

Deadly Carbon Monoxide.

Warning against the deadly carbon monoxide gas, which is the most widely distributed and most frequent cause of industrial accidents and deaths in dwellings, has been issued by the federal bureau of mines.

This gas is a product of incomplete combustion. Because it is without color, odor or taste its presence is frequently unsuspected. It may be found in buildings having a leaky furnace or chimney and in buildings where a gas stove has improper flue connection such as is often found in tenements, tailor shops and [illegible]arding [illegible]ses.

This gas is formed in stoker rooms in refineries, cement and brick plants, mines and tunnels. The exhaust from gasoline motors usually contains 5 to 7 per cent carbon monoxide and sometimes 10 per cent. Deaths from running an automobile engine in a closed garage are not infrequent.

Civilization Traced in Coins.

Man first had an opportunity to call "heads or tails" more than 2,200 years ago, when the practice of stamping a head on coins was instituted by the Greeks, with the likeness of Alexander the Great. Some of these ancient Greek coins are valuable as art objects alone, the embossing being of rare workmanship and surpassing anything to be seen on the coinage of today. It is naturally an example of the great height which Greek culture reached in that day.

The course of civilization, in fact, can easily be traced in these coins. The Roman coinage, some of which bears the head of Nero, is not equal in beauty to that of the Greek, but nevertheless shows a high quality of art. But the money of the succeeding "Dark Ages" is crude in the extreme, and even the English ten-cent piece of 1000 A. D. is childishly primitive in comparison.

Irish Settled in Iceland.

It was only in 1918 that the long constitutional controversy between Iceland and the Danish government resulted in the recognition of that island as a free and sovereign state in association with Denmark, under one and the same king, and once more "the hermit of the Atlantic," as it has been called, is free to pursue its way in accord with those early days when colonists from Norway and Ireland established a commonwealth which lasted more than four centuries.

The Irish of the Twelfth century were not the first of their race to find a home in Iceland, for the first settlers were anchorites from Ireland who found in these remote latitudes a place to exercise their vocation.—Christian Science Monitor.

ROBIN A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR

Hard to Estimate What the Country, as a Whole, Owes to Industrious Small Bird.

There are robins throughout the land. Every morning at daybreak a wave of robin song rolls across the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Who does not recognize this cheering lay as that of our old friend, Robin Redbreast? Nevertheless, he is not a robin at all. The real robin is a little red-breasted resident European bird about the size of a bluebird, and our robin is really a large migrating thrush. But the Pilgrim Fathers found it here, and as it reminded them of the English robin, they named it robin in memory of the little feathered friend in the old home; and, all ornithologists to the contrary notwithstanding, the name sticks.

One of the first things the robin does when it comes home in spring and settles down for the summer is to look for a mate, if not already mated, and then to begin to build a nest. As it raises two or three broods in a season, it must begin early and the nest must be constructed to withstand storm, frost and cold. So the little architect makes the walls of mud and finishes and lines it with nonconductive materials to keep in the heat and keep out the cold. If the weather is favorable, the nest is soon built, but if storms prevail it is long in building and sometimes is forsaken altogether for another constructed under more auspicious skies.

When the little blind, naked, helpless nestlings have broken the shell and been carefully brooded for a time, the struggle to find food enough to fill those hungry caverns within begins. Now the robin becomes a benefactor of mankind, for every day and every hour of the day those yawning mouths must be filled with worms, grubs, cutworms, caterpillars and many kinds of destructive insects. He brings them to the nest, from one to twelve at a time, and in rearing two or three broods he slays his thousands of our insect foes.—State Ornithologist of Massachusetts.

NEEDLE RECORDS NO CHANGE

Wrong Idea Generally Held Concerning the Action of the Compass in Navigation.

The compass needle does not turn around in passing from one hemisphere into the other. The north-seeking end of the compass needle has no greater significance or meaning in the southern hemisphere than the south-seeking end of the needle has in the northern hemisphere, a writer explains. The compass needle is a piece of magnetized steel. It has its positive and negative poles, or north and south poles, just like the earth. The needle and its lines of force align themselves with the earth's lines of force. In the northern hemisphere the north magnetic pole exerts the dominating influence on the needle, so it points to that pole. The south end of the needle is disregarded. In the southern hemisphere the south magnetic pole exerts the dominating influences on the needle and it points to that pole, the north end of the needle in this case being disregarded.

The needle does not reverse in going from one hemisphere to another. The south end of it becomes the guide in the southern hemisphere, as the north end is the guide in the northern hemisphere.

His Favorite Brand.

In the two years the Business Girl has been working in the office with the bookkeeper she has never seen him smoke more than two or three times. On the last occasion that she found him smoking she pretended to scold him. "Haven't I told you that it's wrong to smoke? You won't grow if you smoke so many cigarettes." The bookkeeper grinned, being only five feet ten inches in height. "I know," he answered with a smile, "but I don't smoke very often. You see, I only smoke O. P.'s." "What are O. P.'s?" queried the B. G. "Some special imported brand that are very hard to get?" "Well, not exactly," he grinned, "but they're the only kind I can afford—they're 'Other People's.'" —Chicago Journal.

Too Much Travel.

Two rival western towns, each boasted of the prowess of their football teams and a game was arranged. One town bet heavily on its team, and to make the result fairly certain, hired a celebrated professional player. Early in the game he made a sensational run of 70 yards to a touchdown—and to the surprise of the spectators was immediately removed from the game. The manager gave this explanation:

"Why, we guarantee to pay that guy the rate of a dollar a yard! Do you think I wanted to see the town go busted?"

Redwood Trees of California.

The famous redwood trees of California have many uses. From them come hair dyes, insecticide and also the usual number of wood products. These trees attain their great age because they are non-resinous. They grow 50 feet before they branch, and their root growth is enormous, covering a great expanse of earth.

In manufacturing redwood products there has always been a great waste until recently, when a machine was invented which practically tears the fibers apart and produces a fine hair-like product, which is easily converted into wood pulp for papermaking.

WEDDING STOOD FOR PLEDGE

In Ancient Times It Was Not a Marriage, as That Term Is Understood Today.

"Wedding" is now synonymous with "marrying," but this is a comparatively late development. Originally the two words stood for distinct things. "Marrying" meant marrying as the term is now used, but "wedding" meant a mere pledging which held for a year, after which the couple would agree to continue the trial marriage longer or separate and find other partners.

Under the Danish influence in England "wedding" became so common that an archbishop felt compelled to condemn it. Other churchmen were not so strict. The custom, observes Alice Arayton Greenwood in the opening volume of her "History of the People of England," was rife in the north, where even a bishop allowed his daughter to wed in this manner." This daughter had three husbands, to each of whom she brought as dowry six states which her father had bestowed upon her, but which had really belonged to his cathedral church and not to him. Eventually these estates went to her son and became hereditary. Things had a way of becoming hereditary in those days; there was even hereditary parish clergy.

Signal for Bucket Brigade.

Visitors in Philadelphia are often puzzled as to the significance of the small metal plaques that appear on the fronts of many old houses, observes the New York Evening Post. They ponder over the insignia, wondering whether these curiosities are the coats of arms of the original builders or the marks of some old craft. But the plaque that bears a tree does not represent the family tree of some old Quaker line, nor does the one which sports an object that looks like a churn with a hose attachment signify that the old red brick structure was once a dairy. They are the marks of old insurance companies. They date back to the days when each insurance company had its own bucket brigade for the protection of its policy holders. When the house caught fire it must be saved, if saved it was, by the company which had branded the structure as being under its protection.

Number Hunt Begins

The Number Hunt, that is being conducted by the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce, started off Monday morning very briskly. Hundreds of Hilltop citizens who had received circulars—each with a different number on it—started out on a tour of Hilltop business houses to find the corresponding number that indicated the article given.

Quite a number of them have been located a greater amount yet remain to be found. The first number to be claimed was 10329, held by H. W. Pell, of 229 S. Eureka. It was found at Carlile & Kerr's Store and was for a bottle of Polishean given by the Davor Products Co. If you have a circular, get busy and see if there is not a prize due you by the number on it. The Hunt runs till March 25th.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night of this week it was decided to put on another Number Hunt about in April. If any prizes that are offered this time are not taken up, they will be held over and offered at that time on the new circulars.

A Communication

I wonder how many parents on the Hilltop know when they send their boys and girls out among the business people, just what kind of men they have to deal with. Are their business houses clean morally or have they a bevy of suggestive pictures and placards hung so conspicuously that none could fail to see them?

I grant that most men on the Hilltop are "A-No.-1," but I know also from a very recent experience (which embarrassed me so completely) that there are some business houses that surely need a most thorough cleaning. One morning this week I sent my six year old boy to a certain place on Broad Street and when I called for him later I was astounded to see no less than four pictures portraying one or more figures of nude young women. I had hoped my boy had not seen these, but the eyes of youth are keen, and imagine my chagrin when we had left the place and my boy in his usual way of confiding things to me asked me to lean down that he might whisper to me, and in his sweet childish voice he asked, "Mamma did you see those vulgar pictures?" And now I want to ask, if a child of six years can see the sin of such things, why can not a man of mature years.

So if your business place displays such as these, I think perhaps you will find it more profitable to remove the same from the walls of your business houses.

Glenwood Park Improvement

Councilman M. W. Westlake last Monday evening succeeded in getting an appropriation from the City Council, of a $15,000 bond issue for improving Glenwood Park by purchasing and grading down that high bank just west of the Broad Street entrance, and making a gentle slope clear back to the Shelter House; also to buy the strip of land at the extreme east side of the park that lies along the west border of the Imbecile fence. This will certainly make a decided improvement in the park and do away with that muddy condition on Broad Street which has for years been experienced after a rainy season by the washing down of clay, gravel, etc.

Don't fail to hear West Gate Chorus on Saturday evening, March 11th, at 8 o'clock, at Glenwood M. E. Church. At the conclusion of the program the members of the J. R. B. Sunday School Class will serve refreshments in the basement of the church for the small sum of 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children.

Westwood Lodge, K. of P. Notes

Westwood observed the 58th anniversary of the foundation of the Pythian Order, Feb. 23rd, by special addresses. B. B. Naylor introduced Vice Grand Chancellor Hunker, who came that day from the Ohio river for this special occasion, and entertained the lodge for about half an hour by an interesting talk.

At West Broad Street School on Monday evening, March 13, Westwood's basketball team will play the team from Crestview lodge. This game will be followed by a dance for Pythians and prospective members, and admittance for others than members of Westwood lodge can be had only by card signed by a member of Westwood.

During the month of February the team lost two games to Jos. Dowdall Lodge, one to Canal Winchester, and won one from Canal Winchester team, latter game being played at Canal Winchester.

In spite of the fact that many men are out of employment and some are working only "part time" Westwood has had degree work every meeting night that she cared too this year and then some applications on file.

Thursday evening, February 23rd, the Knight Rank was conferred on squires Cunningham, Orebaugh, Birle and Mercer by a team composed of employees of the Columbus Post Office.

Westwood Temple Pythian Sisters No. 469 have been having quite a few applications and good attendance at their meetings.

DAMAGE DONE TO COLISEUM

English Writer Criticizes Action of the Authorities in Removing Ivy From the Walls.

For many centuries down to February 1, 1872, there was a solemn procession from the Church of San Clemente to the Coliseum in Rome, carrying the relics of Saint Ignatius, the disciple of St. John and companion of Polycarp, around the scene where on that date he had been devoured by lions as the first of the martyrs of the Coliseum. The spot where shortly after his death 115 Christians were shot down by arrows was marked, until 1872, by a cross which was then destroyed.

"The dealings of the authorities with that ancient monument have been neither merciful nor tender," says an article in Cornhill (London). "Nature has clothed its ruined walls with an exquisite veil of greenery; a flora so marvelous and interesting that books had been written on its 400 varieties, a few of which were so rare that their seeds are supposed to have come in ancient days in the cages of wild beasts from tropical countries. They have all been scraped away, the walls are bare, and more damage has been done to them by dragging out the roots of the shrubs than might have happened naturally in the course of centuries.

Ruskin's "Flower Wedding."

There is a beautiful passage about the flower in one of Ruskin's letters. "You will find," he says, "that, in fact, all plants are composed of essentially two parts—the leaf and the root—one loving the light, the other darkness; one liking to be clean, the other to be dirty; one liking to grow for the most part up, the other for the most part down, and each having faculties and purposes of its own.

"But the pure one which loves the light has, above all things, the purpose of being married to another leaf, and having child leaves, and children's children of leaves, to make the earth fair forever. And when the leaves marry they put on wedding robes and are more glorious than Solomon in all his glory, and they have feasts of honey, and we call them flowers."

Each Man Allowed Four Wives.

Servants are so inexpensive in Java that even a person in moderate circumstances can afford at least six. Europeans living in India and Java find the luxury of many servants difficult to give up when they go home, and very often stay in the East for that very reason.

According to the religion of Java, which is Mohammedan, a man is allowed four wives. But the H. C. L. has even reached Java, and the number of wives has, on that account, been cut down to a great degree.

If a nobleman marries beneath him he does not bother to go to the ceremony, but very kindly sends his sword or his hat to represent him.

MYSELF

I have to live with myself and so,
I want to be fit for myself to know.
I want to be able, as days go by,
To look myself always straight in the eye;
I don't want to stand with the setting sun
And hate myself for the things I've done.

I don't want to keep on closet shelf
And fool myself as I come and go,
A lot of secrets about myself,
nto thinking that nobody else shall know
The kind of man I really am;
I don't want to dress up myself in sham.

I want to go out with my head erect;
I want to deserve all men's respect.
But here in the struggle for form and pelf,
I want to be able to like myself.
I don't want to look at myself and know
That I'm bluster and bluff and empty show.

I never can hide myself from me;
I see what others may never see.
I know what others may never know;
I never can fool myself, and so
Whatever happens I want to be Self-respecting and conscience-free

Guernsey's Oldest Charter.

Just recently a search in the archives of Exeter cathedral has brought to light the oldest charter relating to the royal court of Guernsey, and confirming a grant of land by Peter Vaver to the abbey of Mont St. Michel. This in itself would be interesting, but the document reveals one or two other important historical facts, viz., that the president of the court of Guernsey in 1179 was called vicomte, and therefore administered as a duchy was, and that the court was a royal court (Curia Regis). It was only in later years that a measure of self-government was conferred on the islanders.

GOT IN BAD WITH PIPKINS

No Question That Observation, Really Innocent, Was Not in the Best Possible Taste.

"I don't often say mean things, said Dingbatt as he stuffed the piece of apple pie and wondered which was the best point of attack, "but I surely said something mean yesterday. And I said it to my best friend, too."

"How come?" asked his companion, who had a cup custard that could be tackled from any angle.

"Well, you know Pipkins? I have known him nearly all my life. He has always had the faculty of making money—not millions, of course, but more than I ever had. Several times he has helped me when I needed it, and right now if I had to have some money I could get it from Pipkins. And I would get a lecture with it, too. Not ill-natured, but a lot of good advice, for Pipkins likes to feel that he is managing my affairs.

"Well, yesterday I said to him: 'Pipkins, you have made a lot of money—more than I ever expect to have. From a financial point of view I am a good deal of a failure. But I have been married 30 years, my wife still kisses me good-by when I come down town and she sees me turn the corner if I go home on my usual train. As a husband, I regard myself as an eminent success'."

"I don't see anything mean about that."

"No? Well, Pipkins' first wife eloped with a cheap actor, his second wife divorced him, and he and his present wife have most of their communications by mail or telephone."

MERELY BORROWED BY DEFOE

Daniel Defoe (1659-1731), the famous English author, as is well known, conceived the design of "Robinson" Crusoe from the account he heard of Alexander Selkirk, a Scottish mariner, who hailed from the fishing village of Largo, in Fifeshire. Selkirk was left on the island of Juan Fernandez in the Pacific ocean, as a punishment for mutiny, and his history is briefly given in the memorial tablet, which in recent times has been erected on that island: "In memory of Alexander Selkirk, mariner, a native of Largo, in the county of Fife, Scotland, who lived on this island in complete solitude for four years and four months. He was landed from the Cinque Ports galley, 90 tons, 16 guns, A. D. 1704, and was taken off in the Duke privateer, February 12, 1708. He died lieutenant of H. M. S. Weymouth, A. D. 1723, aged forty-seven years. This tablet is erected near Selkirk's lookout by Commodore Powell and officers of H. M. S. Topaz 1868 A. D." Selkirk's cup and chest have been preserved and are now to be seen in the antiquarian museum in Edinburgh.

"Wolverine" Not Complimentary.

Somebody put something over on the people of Michigan when they termed inhabitants of the state Wolverines. The wolverine, according to his most charitable biographers, is the most detestable four-legged brute of the new world. It is the largest of the weasel type of animal, which includes the mink, skunk and marten, being about the size of a full-grown bull dog, but very short in the legs. Besides the wolverine, the skunk is a gentlemanly and companionable creature. He is fierce, gluttonous and unspeakably filthy in his habits.

Michigan had fewer wolverines than Wisconsin, Minnesota or northern New York in the early days. One finds the term "Wolverine" commonly employed by residents of Ohio about 100 years ago when they spoke disparagingly of the settlers of Michigan. When the boundary trouble was at its hottest in the 1830's they used it most freely and most bitterly.

Strange Friends.

It appears from the testimony of many naturalists that the lomechusa and atemeles beetles live in the nests of ants, much as cows live with man. On the sides of their abdomens they have many unicellular glands that secrete a fluid that the ants like as much as we like cows' milk. The beetles, however, have an independent standing in their adopted home and are rather friends and allies than domesticated animals, for they are quite capable of protecting themselves. Besides the fluid that the hosts like so well, the beetle can produce from other glands a fluid of most disagreeable odor, which stupefies the ants, and which is used whenever the ants become troublesome. In general, however, they apparently use it only against strange ants—the enemies of their hosts.

Jenny Lind, Swedish Singer.

Jenny Lind, or Madame Goldschmidt, famous Swedish singer, was born at Stockholm October 6, 1820, and died at Wynd's Point, Malvern, November 2, 1887. She first appeared at the Royal theater in Stockholm as Agatha in "Der Freischutz," March 7, 1838. From 1841 to 1842 she studied in Paris. The next two years she spent in Stockholm. From 1844 to 1847 she studied and sang in Germany, going from there to England, where she remained for two years, thence coming to America. She was married to Otto Goldschmidt, conductor and composer, in Boston, February 5, 1852. The last four years of her life she taught singing at the Royal College of Music.

First Jews in Virginia.

Jews first settled in the South in Richmond, Va., more than 130 years ago. In 1791 the first synagogue was established there. In the same year the members purchased a plot of land as a burial ground to be used for the Jewish residents of Richmond, and Jews were buried there until 1816.

For a long time the congregation prospered. But in 1840 a change occurred in the fortunes of the synagogue. It was in that year that a large influx of German Jews came to America. They worshiped according to the German ritual. A number of its members left the original synagogue to establish another congregation. The then new congregation, Beth Ahaba, is still in existence. The name of the original congregation was Beth Shalome.

Lantern for New Year.

As the new year sweeps round the world from the one hundred and eightieth meridian of longitude, it gets a bright if silent welcome from the little village of Weldon, near Kettering, in Northamptonshire. There on the tower of the parish church stands a lantern 15 feet high. Erected about 200 years ago, the lantern was lighted on winter nights to guide travelers through the dark forest of Rockingham. The railway and improved roads have abolished the forest dangers, and now the lantern is lighted only once a year, on New Year's eve, to welcome in the New Year.

FOOD VALUE OF NUTS LARGE

According to Writer in English Magazine, There Can Be No Better Article of Diet.

Nut crackers are not considered a necessary equipment of the ordinary household dining table. The dietary value of nuts not being fully recognized, this implement is rarely required nowadays.

Yet there is no better form of diet than nuts, declares a writer in London Answers. The family fable which consigns them to the catalogue of the indigestibles is "an unconscionable time a-dying." A child's taste, however, is often the best criterion of a food's value, and all children love nuts, even as do monkeys.

We should consume nuts all the year round, eating, say, a certain quantity daily chewing them methodically.

If children had as free access to the nut crop as have monkeys there would be fewer digestive weaklings. This applies to grownups as well.

If nuts disagree, even with the most delicate, it is because they are partaken of at the wrong time. When consumed between meals they are almost certain to disagree, as they will also if eaten after a heavy meal of other food or insufficiently masticated.

The proper time to eat nuts is just at the beginning of meals. Then they fill the mouth with a copious flow of saliva which will assist in emulsifying the fats stored in this important food.

In cold weather they are invaluable, assisting greatly in maintaining the bodily heat. Nothing, therefore, can compare with them as a morning diet for children and a small saucerful will not be too large a supply.

A Hilltop Radio Station

If one should walk south on Oakley Avenue and turn in at No. 81, they would see, just back of the house a little lean-to shed about 8 x 8 feet square. On opening the small door at the corner and going inside you will see the interior of this shed covered with many electric wires running cross and criss-cross along the four sides and ceiling, connecting different kinds of transformers, reducers, cut-offs, switches and "thing". This is Walter Baker's Radio Station.

We paid his place a visit last Saturday evening, and must say we were certainly highly entertained. By turning and re-turning several dials (we called 'em), pulling switches, etc. We were introduced to "Pittsburgh" from which place a Westinghouse program, consisting of a lecture, followed by a musical program we distinctly heard.

After that Walter took us out through space, when we heard the following message from Ashville, N. C.: "Am interested in Grebe CR-2. What condition is it in. Sign Malone, 246 Hillside St., Ashville, N. C. 8:45.

After that, such places were heard from as the Detroit News; the Ocean steamer "Pastores" of the United Fruit Co.; the boat New Orleans, probably on the Mississippi river; another boat Kanawha; a station at Rome, Ga.; and another at Eldorado, Kas., etc.

Walter tells us he has heard from distances as far away as Texas, Massachusetts, Connecticut and even Oregon at one time.

Walter who is 19 years of age has been at this in all about six years, but has greatly improved his outfit during the past year or so until the present one, which has cost in all nearly $500 is one of the best in this locality. His Radio No. is 8 BIB. He also has a sending apparatus. He is planning to be a land commercial radio operator in the future. His is the only government licensed amateur station on the West Side, and he oversees the other Radio stations west of the river.

A visit to his "den" some time would be well worth while by anyone so doing, and we feel sure the Hilltop can feel proud at having such a station in our midst

New Homes

Messrs. Orebaugh & Son have one double and two single homes on North Warren Street ready for the finishing. They expect to start several more homes in a month or so.

Mr. Geo. A. Dial has the foundations in for about a dozen homes on the hilltop.

Four or five homes have been started in the new addition on the north side of Sullivant Avenue just west of the Imbecile grounds.

The building of homes on the hilltop has begun with a large number of home already on the way. The prospects for a great year in the building line in our community are very promising, in fact it looks as though this year bids fair to become the banner year in the building line for a number of years.

Repairing the portion of the Friends' Rescue Home, which burned several weeks ago has been about completed, and will soon be ready for occupancy, when they hope to have better facilities than before.

Social Evenings

Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Van Buren of 29 South Terrace, entertained the "Night Hawk Club" with a dinner February 23. Covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Culp, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Fairchild, Mr. and Mrs. M. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Finders, Mr. and Mrs. W. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Mittenbuler, Mr. and Mrs. R. Fishbaugh. The dining room was beautifully decorated honoring Washington's birthday. After the dinner the guests spent the evening in dancing and a social time. The party broke up at a late hour, all having had a most enjoyable evening. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Fairchild, March 18th.

Miss Helen Louise Weatherman, 443 South Ogden Avenue, treasurer of Miss Bishop's Sunday School class of the Burgess Avenue U. B. Sunday School, entertained members of the class at her home Wednesday evening, March 1st. A pleasant program of music and recitations, a selection being given by each one present was presented followed by business of the class. Games were enjoyed. A delightful lunch was served. Those present were: Misses Ruth Scott, Leota Farrell, Flora Kuch, Gladys Miller, Mary Burke, Alice Story, Edna Weatherman, Helen Weatherman, Miss Bishop. ### WHERE SPONGES ARE FOUND

Few people who use sponges ever give a thought as to how they are obtained, says a correspondent in the London Daily Mail. The finest qualities and largest quantities of our sponges come from the Mediterranean—the chief grounds being off the Greek and Turkish islands—thence through the Dardanelles to the Sea of Marmora, and so along the coast of Asiatic Turkey and Syria to Cyprus.

Here the sponges are brought up by divers, either stripped or attired in full diving costume. When sponges first reach the surface they present a fleshy-looking appearance, the substance being covered with a firm skin, or membrane, in which apertures appear and disappear seemingly at the animal's will. When cut, the interior is somewhat like raw meat in appearance, being intersected by numerous canals and cavities. The cavities are filled with a sticky fluid of greyish brown color, termed "milk."

This is the only living portion of the animal. And must needs be removed immediately; otherwise putrefaction speedily sets in and destroys the elastic nature of the sponge. If this operation is not performed on board before the vessel reaches shore, the filled sponge bags are dispatched with all speed to the gathering grounds. There the fluid is removed and various cleaning and bleaching processes transform the "raw" sponge into a beautiful lemon-yellow color.

This done, the sponges pass to other hands for trimming to shape, and later they go to the graders, who sort them according to quality and size. The next process is that of drying, after which they are weighed and packed ready for shipment.

Wolverine Always a Pest.

The wolverine is found all around the world, but most commonly north of the fiftieth parallel of latitude. It is as common in Siberia as it is in northern Canada. It is a notorious feeder upon carrion, and is a thief. It robs traps of mink, skunk and other fur-bearing animals, and eats them ravenously. It will follow up a trapper's line of traps, spring them cunningly without being caught, and then eat the bait. It will gnaw through the side of a log house to get at the settler's store of food, and it is almost impossible to make a cache of food inaccessible to the wolverine's powerful teeth and claws.

The best place in Columbus to buy a Spring Coat, Suit or Dress is at Seiller's. Our slogan—Style and Quality at a price.

Mrs. L. F. Smoot is at home from the University Hospital, where she underwent two operations. She is improving fast. Her many friends will be glad to see her out again soon.

HOW TO BREAK BAD HABITS AND CULTIVATE GOOD ONES

Habit is defined as a tendency or inclination which by repetition has become easy, spontaneous or even unconscious. Habits result from individual acts repeated; and from habit results character. Someone has said: "Sow an act, reap a habit; sow a habit, reap a character; sow a character, reap a destiny." Man is a creature of habit. Most things he does are from force of habit. His habits either make or unmake him. Many persons are the slaves of bad habits. There are few, if any, who do not have some bad habits. How to break them and cultivate good habits?

1. Seek the help of God. The task is too great for our unaided strength. Those who make the attempt in their own strength fail. Our disadvantage is that our bad habits have weakened the force of our moral nature to resist them. It is because we have the "law of sin and death" in us that we have these bad habits. The teaching of the Scripture reference is that it is only by the aid of the Spirit of life that we can gain the victory over them.

2. Make up your mind that it cannot be accomplished without a determined effort on your own part. Resolve that you will make the effort. Summon all the forces of your moral nature. Co-operate with God. Don't expect him to help you unless you are willing to put forth honest effort yourself.

3. Break off your bad habits at once. Don't attemnt it by degrees. You never heard of a drunkard reforming by drinking less and less, until he finally became a total abstainer. Faster and faster from the elevation falls the weight downward, faster and faster speeds the runaway car down the grade. Good habits mark the upgrade, bad habits the decline. Perfection is not easy; destruction is. The nearer perfection, the slower the progress, the greater the toiling. Whereas the nearer we are to destruction the more swift and sure the end.

4. There is no permanency of breaking of bad habits without forming good ones. You have heard of the old saying, "Nature abhors a vacuum." This is true all over the world. The field that is left unsown is sure to throw up a crop of weeds. It will produce vegetables or grain if the seed be placed in the ground. And these useful plants will at length take possession of things, and grow the weeds out. How glad I used to be as a boy when I came upon a pale, sickly rag-weed growing alongside of a vigorous celery plant, I would say, "Ah, my fine fellow, you are getting the worst of it this time." This was the right order, so with the mind and heart, plant a new thought, a new affection, a noble purpose, a high ideal in place of the old unworthy: and, if properly cared for, we may hope that it will grow and crowd out the evil. "Satan still some mischief finds for idle hands to do."

5. It will help to associate with persons of good habits. To this very end God has given us our social nature, and our opportunities as members of society.

J. S. McGAW.

Social Stunts

Tuesday, March 13th, marked the fourth birthday anniversary of Mary Jane Haslett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Haslett, 330 S. Richardson Ave. To celebrate the event, a number of her little friends gathered at her home that afternoon, where a couple of hours were spent as only a bunch of little folks can spend them, when they are turned loose. The features were games, puzzles, ice cream and cake, prizes, gifts, etc. The table was decorated with Easter flowers. The kiddies present were: Fay Bigelow, Catharine McCall, Virginia Whitesal, Catharine Naultner, Madge Walker, Dorris Lawson, Joe Lawson, James Painter, Harry Wells, Glen Schaffer Jackie Haslett and Mary Louise Haslett.

A social evening was enjoyed Saturday, March 11th, at Glenwood M. E. Church, by the J. R B. Class and a large attendance of friends. The West Gate Chorus gave an excellent program which was enjoyed thoroughly by everyone present. Not only were the choral numbers fine but there were several delightful solos, readings by two members and a flute solo on the program. The West Gate Chorus was greatly appreciated by the class and may well be proud of their fine organization.

After the program refreshments were served in the basement.

The program will be in three parts; miscellaneous numbers by pupils and orchestra; a playlet by the Dramatic Club; closing numbers by Miss Robbins, Miss Greiser and Mr. J. Howard Young, Baritone, who was recently made Director of the Vocal Department.

The J. R. B. Class met at the home of Mrs. Mossman, 394 S. Warren Ave. Tuesday evening, March 14th. In spite of the bad weather there was a good attendance. There have been about 35 lucky numbers located in the Number Hunt. There were about 107 prizes offered. A very large number of people destroyed the circular at their home before they realized what it was, hence there will probably be a large number of the lucky numbers not taken. But the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce will put on another number hunt beginning April 10th, when the present prizes will again be offered, together with a large number of new ones. WATCH FOR THE CIRCULARS. Don't burn 'em up.

The first of a series of afternoon teas to be given by ladies of The Parent-Teacher Assn. of Highland Ave. School, will be Friday, March 17th, from two until four o'clock, at 241 Midland Ave. The hostesses will be, Mrs. Abbe, Mrs. Acker, Mrs. Alsfrach, Mrs. Bartgis, Mrs. Drumm and Mrs. Downer.

There will be a musical program and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

A free will offering will be taken.

Mrs. Dulgar wishes to announce the celebration of the Second Anniversary of the Ideal Restaurant, corner Broad and Wheatland, next Saturday evening, March 18th, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. Music will be furnished by an orchestra. Ice cream and cake will be served. There will also be a demonstration of the new Sunbeam drink. All free. Everybody welcome. A good time is promised.

"Kitchen Cabinet Orchestra" presented by the ladies of Fourth Avenue Church of Christ, Cheerful Workers of Hilltop Church of Christ, Monday evening, March 20th, at 8:00 o'clock. Admission 25cents. Children 15 cents.

Councilman M. W. Westlake succeeded in getting a bill passed by the City Council, Monday night, whereby a tourist's Camp will be established in the lower section of Glenwood Park along Broad street. It will be fitted up with stone tables and cooking conveniences, making a typical camp ground for tourists, coming through on the National Highway, who wish to rest and prepare their meals, etc. Water will also be provided. This will be a fine thing for this section of the city and will help to make the Hilltop a place to be remembered by those going through

To The Parents and Teachers of the Hilltop namely West Broad St. gathering:

I just wonder how many of the parents and teachers are satisfied with the present way these meetings are conducted now any I have been too, or heard, have more push and get up than I ever saw at all the meetings at West Broad. First of all the president and vice-president know no more about their duties than some sixth year scholars. I suggest we all get together and push for Miss Judd and Mrs. Walton or some of the wide awake teachers to conduct these meetings as they are falling off instead of gathering up the Hilltopers.

Mrs. I. C. SMITH.

PATIENTS HEALED BY PROXY

Among Indians of British Columbia, Physician Takes Medicine and the Sick Man Benefits.

Among the Tahl Tau Indians of British Columbia there are many curious customs to be found, but the strangest of all is the way their doctors practice medicine, writes Temple Manning in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

I had spent some time in the neighborhood before I heard anything about their medical ways, and probably I should have left the country without knowing anything at all about them had not one of my guides, Randy by name, had the ill luck to fall sick. From my field medicine chest I selected the drug that appeared to be indicated by his symptoms, but when I approached his cot to give it to him Randy turned his face to the wall and voiced a weak but determined protest against taking the medicine. He wanted me to take it.

With the patience that I have learned is necessary if you would accomplish anything with an Indian I explained I was not sick, but he was, and that by taking the medicine he would get well. My patience and my words were useless. Randy was determined not to take that medicine, and take it he did not. But he begged me send for the tribal medicine man, and to humor Randy I sent for him.

When the "doctor" arrived he proved to be a weak-looking, dirty, old man, but Randy hailed him with joy. I left them alone together.

Hardly had I finished dinner when Randy's squaw came to the tent and begged me to come and see Randy. Naturally, I went.

When I asked Randy what I could do for him he pointed to his "doctor," and with the blissfulness of faith he said:

"That ums the way to take medicine."

I stared at the old "doctor" in amazement. For instead of giving his patient the medicine he had prepared, he was taking it himself. The only part of the cure to which Randy was subjected was the discomfort of hearing tom-tom drums beaten at his bedside all night long.

When Randy was ill and about again, for recover he did with amazing quickness, he never ceased to argue the medicine-taking question. As a clincher he would point to himself as living evidence of the truth of his theory that medicine should be taken not by the patient, but by the doctor.

Moon a Dead World.

The moon is a dead world. The tortured lavas, the dust, the rocks pitted with craters far and wide, the jumbled piles of stone, all lie as they did a hundred million years ago. Save for the bulletlike impact of countless meteors every day, every stone lies just as it fell.

We may wonder why it is that bodies so dissimilar as the earth and moon should be associated in a bond as close as planet and satellite. The secret is one of size. The earth has 81 times the moon's weight and can hold a blanket of air and water. The moon is small, and cannot.

It Went.

Smith bought a business through an agent as a going concern. After six months he failed, but took his trouble very lightly.

Meeting the agent some time later, he said:

"Do you remember selling me a business as a going concern?"

"Yes, of course I do," replied the agent.

"Well," said Smith, "it's gone."

He Gets It Again.

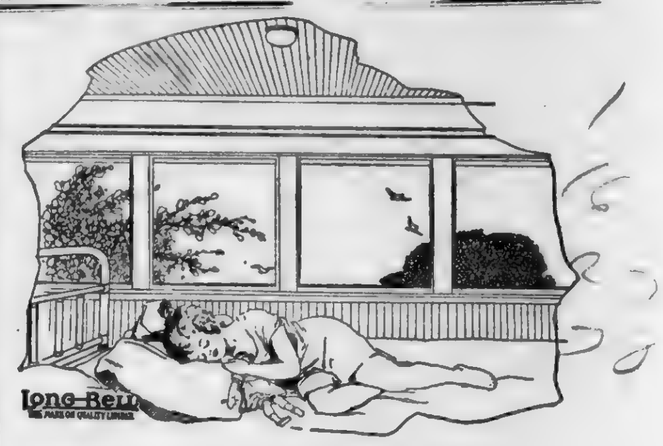
Reggie—Doubtless I shall marry, y' know, but I shall take jolly good care not to marry a woman who knows more than I do.

Miss Bright—You are very romantic.



Reggie—It seems to me I'm very practical.

Miss Bright—Not at all. You have your mind fixed on an impossible deal. —Boston Transcript.

Result of Selfishness.

The age of reptiles was an age of selfishness. Each lizard thought only of himself, while our ancestors helped and were considerate of each other. Selfishness in nature is a crime, and will surely bring a penalty on those who practice it. The lizards whose philosophy of life was "get everything" have received extinction, while we were spared to profit by their fate.

The hereditary memories of the terrible things our ancestors experienced and conquered in that age are still strong within us. Our deep, unreasoning terrors and hatreds of creeping things of snakes, and flesh-tearing fangs, are a direct inheritance from the age of reptiles.

Another Pleasure Our Grandfathers Missed

It wasn't so many years ago that folks thoughtnight air was poisonous. Your grandparents probably slept with the windows closed tight except in the summer time.

Everybody knows now-a-days that the more fresh air we get into our lungs day and night the better off we are.

Hence the sleeping porches that you find throughout the land.

There's no single feature you can add to your home that will be enjoyed by the entire family like a sleeping porch. It means better health; it means a good night's rest and arising in the morning fully refreshed.

Gee---the appetite that out-door sleeping gives you!

We have everything necessary for the Sleeping Porch, either the less expensive screened porbh, or the more elaborate sun parlor effect with windows

One on Auntie.

Aunt Sarah had been very ill and after sufficient recovery, came to see her nephew. The family had commented on how badly she looked and the amount of weight she had lost.

Several weeks later, little William, while taking a bath noticed the wrinkled condition of his hands, and wanted to know the reason for it.

His mother told him the water caused it, to which he replied, "My but auntie must have had her face in the water for a long time."

Daughter's Joke.

Father—How is it, Helen, that your mother has to complain to me so often about your actions?

Fifteen-Year-Old—I guess mother thinks that, seeing I'm a girl, my deeds must be all miss-doings. — Boston Transcript.

BE ON GUARD

We understand that the whiskey forces are boasting that they will elect a wet Congress this fall. Let the people take notice and see to it that they keep on the trail of the liquor elemen and keep the conscience of the good citizens alive and alert to this enemy of all good, and under no circumstances guard and permit the liquor oligarchy to put a wet Congress over on us. By proper agitation of the subject, a dry Congress can be elected in this country that will annul the Volstead Act. Everything and anything ever said in its favor was untrue and has been proven to be a falsehood. From the church press, the pulpit, the school, and public platform the subject of prohibition should be kept before the people, and the public should be well posted and alert and ready to meet the foe with crushing defeat at any moment.

GETTING WISDOM

Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom, and with all thy getting, get understanding. Prov. 4:7.

I have taught thee in the way of wisdom; I have led thee in the right paths. Prov. 4:11.

So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding. Prov. 2:2.

Doth not wisdom cry and understanding put forth her voice? Prov. 8:1.

O ye simple, understanding wisdom; and ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart. Prov. 8:5.

My son, attend unto my wisdom, and bow thine ear to my understanding. Prov. 5:1.

Pairings at a Paring

By MARTHA MACWILLIAMS

© 1932, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

There was never such another apple year. Every orchard bowed earthward with gay scented fruit, cider flooded the cellars of the countryside, and young mountains of apple barrels lay snug beneath the trees. Naturally the making of apple butter grew commonplace—much too usual to be turned into a festival, as happened sometimes in scant years. Still the younger element had its innings; paring bees after the old-fashion sprang up afresh, with much laughter as parings were dropped over the left shoulder to form initial of the future partner. All those whose sweethearts came in the letter S class had a reasonable hope of good apple omen, since any well-continued sound paring—and what other was worth the casting?—had a curl at each end that in themselves automatically formed the fateful leter.

The Jordans had the finest apples and the prettiest girls round about. Hence their bee, coming well toward the end of things, was merry, crowded and mighty industrious. The number of knives flying round and round juicy red or yellow fruit was something phenomenal. There was rivalry, too, in the output, as well as in the emptying of the tubs that brought in the fruit. Benny Jordan, belle of the neighborhood, had her hands full escaping all the partners who wanted to team up with her. She took refuge at last in making the team four square. Thus there was more excitement in the racing as well as more glory in winning.

Benny did not want to beat every body else. She was at once too courteous and too crafty for that. In her own house she felt she must hold back a bit. There were three other bees in prospect. At them she could let her fingers fly their nimblest. So she took for her teammates the Jenkins lad, whose nickname was Slow, and Nell Crabb, a lightning worker, if only she wouldn't stop to stare so often. These two would, she was sure, balance nicely all that she herself and Roy Elton could do. Their gang ought to come third, which was high enough to save humiliation, and low enough to please the visiting helpers without hurting victor feelings. Miss Benny was, you see, something of a diplomat. The way of it is to come later. Just now all is apples and the paring and slicing thereof.

The Jordans, of course, had a paring machine, but use of it would be death to the fun of the evening. So knives flew like mad, slices fell in cascade, the strings mounted in torrents upon the rods which were bearing them to the drying house. By 11 o'clock the last tubful had been turned from beauty to use, the heap of selected parings was carefully put aside, and everybody washed up, spruced a bit and began devouring gingerbread, pumpkin pie, thick sandwiches of oozing fatness and pickles of such spicing they made an almost oriental atmosphere.

Coffee, hot, strong, clear as starlight, dark as Erebus, washed down the Homeric feast. Nobody was ashamed of appetite—indeed the champion eaters were prize guests. Cider, to be sure, was plentifully on tap—but who wanted to smell, much less taste it, after an evening all apples? A flute, fife and fiddle were straining to make music—at least their players said so, each vaunting his instrument. Since the three played upon all occasions musical, the rivalry betwixt them was keen, even fierce.

When at last they struck up "Money Musk," the flute just half a bar ingarist Benny had an inspiration. It was to let the fateful peels choose partners—everybody to throw, and those that made the same letter dance together the first set and the last. This made a merry time, the music going its maddest while the choosing went on. But Benny was caught in her own trap by order of the skins she was vowed to Hop-Light Martin, the man of all others she wished to avoid.

He had money, and traces of a college education. Also, and further, he fancied himself so greatly he suspected womankind in general of sharing his feelings. Worst of all, he hated with deadly malice young John Glover, upon whom Miss Benny had fixed her mind and heart as her proper mate. Young John was just getting a foothold in the law—but he was ambitious as Lucifer. Hence, Benny's diplomacy—she knew all things needs must have a beginning—young John with his native township behind him solidly had more than an even chance of getting the county, and state, to have the same mind.

He knew what Hop-Light thought of him—and returned the opinion with interest. He had also an understanding as to Benny's inclinations and plans. So he ought not to have minded in the least seeing her swinging down the middle in the opening Virginia reel, nor the setting in Sir Roger de Coverly, which waked general applause.

Mind it he did to a degree that made him rampantly careless. Torn gowns, trodden corns marked his progress to such an extent that there was wide-eyed amazement and whispers that he must somehow have got more hard cider than he well could carry. Benny knew the truth, but his seeming mistrust of her made her so furious she forgot prudence for a time and outdanced herself. Hop-Light, all said and done, was certainly a fine partner—he knew plenty of old catches fitting the tunes, and sang them with gusto in a robustious tenor that set the crowd clapping and laughing hard. Slow Jenkins even shouted. "You're elected, Hop-Light, no matter what your're runnin' for." Hop-Light bowed grandly; then, the dance ended, he stood out clear of everything crying, "Now for a hornpipe! Say, Johnny, you watch me!" to Glover.

A taunt this. Johnny was abler in head than heels. But he was past prudence with anger, so he stepped in front of the hornpiper, saying with curling lip: "No matter about the split. Right now we'll have the smack," suiting the action to the words, and sending Hop-Light reeling. A clinch was the logical rejoinder. Hop-Light did not make it. Instead he caught balance, flung his arms above his head, saying airily: "Bad, bad boy; Have to 'tend to him later."

Back, forth, in, out, around, about he leaped and flung, in perfect time to the music and snapping his own fingers. Benny was blind with rage, at both of them. John should have known better. Hop-Light should have acted worse. She must somehow intervene, it would never do to make matters serious by taking notice of the blow.

It must pass as sportive or raise a great scandal—one that would mean John's being forbidden the house. Squire Jordan was a hearty man, but had the strictest ideas of hospitality. Horse-play he did not mind—the license of parings amply excused it. But there might be a vicious set-to when the dance ended unless—suddenly she had an inspiration—and darted away to realize it.

Thus it fell out that in almost the last flourish before the split Hop-Light stepped upon an apple peel carelessly flung at his feet. From whose hand none saw, or cared to know, but the result was deadly. He slipped, staggered, tried to find his feet, staggered again harder, and fell sprawling at Nell Crabb's feet. Then be sure a roar went up. Nell, poor dear, had pursued Hop-Light faithfully ever since she let down her frocks. Glow Jenkins caught Hop-Light by one arm, Benny Jordan by the other; together they yanked him upright and thrust Nell's hand in his, crying: "Before witnesses you've kneit to Nelly. Now kiss her and she'll say yes."

"You, too?" John Glover, asked in Benny's ear. She nodded. And so there were pairings at the paring.

One of Them.

The manager of the big drapery store was bombarding the applicant with the usual questions:

"Are you teetotal?"

"Yes."

"Good salesman?"

"Yes."

"Can you tell a good lie?"

"Oh, yes."

"Well, I'll give you a start."

The young man got on famously until a French girl approached him and stated her requirements in her native tongue. Then he was stumped.

Five minutes later he was facing his indignant employer.

"This is scandalous, sir. When I engaged you you told me you could speak French."

"True," replied the culprit, "but you also asked me if I could tell a good lie."—Tit-Bits.

The Bamboo Box

By ROSE MEREDITH

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

"Chinatown!" exclaimed Dorothea as the sight-seeing car stopped at the curb and they could look up and down the crooked streets and see, hear and smell, particularly smell, China transplanted to the new world.

"At last we are in Chinatown—the next thing to visiting China itself," gurgled Marguerite.

"Smells almost like it," agreed Weeks, elevating his handsome nose. "Oh, I know I'm a lowbrow," he added hastily.

"Where shall we go first?" the girls cried in unison.

"Home," said their escort timidly.

"Idiot," sniffed Marguerite. "Come, Dorry, let us go into this darling little shop and buy curios to take home."

Willie Weeks helped them to the narrow sidewalk and gloomily trailed them as they skipped down three steps and pushed open a narrow shop door.

A slant-eyed yellow man popped up behind the counter and spread his long-nailed fingers on the neat counter. "What have?" he asked blandly.

Dorothea waved her hand airily. "Willee lookkee roundee, Sam," she said in what she thought was the Chinese language.

The shopkeeper shook his head violently. "No kleep laundlee, no sabe—maybe want teapots?"

"Yes, teapots!" said Dorothea, nodding her head frantically. "Teapots and—tea."

More headshaking. "No chop suey place—curio shop. Here teapots!" The Chinese indicated a shelf loaded with teapots of every size, shape and color.

Two or three Chinese customers turned to watch the Americans as they amiably wrangled over the question of what they should buy. At last their arms were filled with knobby packages, and the Orientals' bored expression had changed to one of fixed interest.

"Now you shall each choose a souvenir to take home," said Willie Weeks generously. "This is on me, you know."

Dorothea's blue eyes went back to a curious bamboo box which was on the counter. The blue sleeve of a Chinaman who was buying joss sticks almost covered the article, but to Dorothea it was a thing of mystery; she imagined it might contain a silk shawl, perhaps a string of odd beads or some quaint treasure from the Orient.

"Pay It," Ordered the Sergeant.

"I'd like that bamboo box," she said quietly.

"I want one, too," echoed Marguerite. "It's darling; let's not open them until we get home. Speak to him, Willie, before some one else buys them!"

The three of them crowded up to the counter and the other customers moved aside.

"Two of those boxes," said Willie Weeks, touching the bamboo box.

A Chinaman leaped from behind them and tried to snatch the box away from Mr. Weeks. He shrieked shrilly at them in words they did not understand.

"No can sell," protested the proprietor.

"Nonsense. It was on the counter. How much is it, anyway?"

"No can sell," said the man doggedly, while the shrieking Chinaman leaped frantically at the bamboo box which Mr. Weeks kept out of reach with clever sleight-of-hand tricks.

"Give me two like it," panted Willie.

"No more—not for sale," there was a wailing note in the man's voice.

"Choose something else, girls," Willie was saying, when Marguerite snatched the box from his fingers and darted out of the shop. "Pay for it, Willie, and come along," she tossed over her slim shoulder as she gained the sidewalk.

Dorothea followed her and Willie came after, with three Chinamen in hot pursuit, shrieking in ear-splitting tones that instantly crowded the sidewalks with an eager audience. At the corner two stout policemen gathered them into one protesting group and bundled them off to the station house. The Chinese [illegible] rushed as if he were eager to explain, but no one could understand what he did say when he talked.

"Can all that talk," said the desk sergeant wearily. "How much you want for the basket?" A malignant smile came into the face of the shopkeeper. "Twenty dollars," he said sullenly.

"Pay it," ordered the sergeant.

Willie Weeks paid it, inwardly seething.

"Everybody beat it now!" commanded the Law.

"Open the basket, miss," The policeman craned his neck at Marguerite as he spoke. Everybody else looked, but the shopkeeper and his friends drew close to the door.

The girls lifted the cover and stared. Everybody stared.

In the middle of the basket was a bowl of rice; on one side was a pair of common bone chopsticks and on the other side was a handful of dried lichee nuts—that was all.

The shopkeeper stretched out a skinny finger toward his tall companion. "Belong all same him dinner box." He turned and padded out into the street, followed by his companions. They disappeared around the first corner, but Willie Weeks stopped on the steps and faced his two fair friends. Heartless laughter still echoed behind them. "I'm terribly hungry," sighed Dorothea, changing the subject.

"I wonder where we can find a chop suey—" began Marguerite hopefully, when Mr. Weeks thrust the open box under their pretty noses.

"If we eat anywhere it will be out of this," he said grimly. "I'm busted!"

TRACED TO PRINTER'S DEVIL

That Busy Individual Is Given Credit for Establishment of Rubber-Heel Industry.

A printer had sore feet, says the Boot and Shoe Recorder. He had to stand for long hours at his case, setting up type and then distributing it back again from the forms. The floor became pretty hard after five or six hours of this, so he got hold of a rubber mat to stand on and put this in front of the case.

But the printer's devil was full of mischief and would hide the mat during the noon hour or before the printer in question came to work.

So in order to fool the printer's devil the printer-with-the-sore-feet worked out a scheme which, according to the traditions of the industry, laid the foundation for the whole business of rubber heels, now one of the considerable industries of the country running into millions of dollars.

For the printer took his rubber mat and cut out soles and heels from it, tacked them on to his shoes and thus equipped, went about his work in peace in utter defiance of printer's devils and oblivious of the fact that he was founding a new industry.

The business of making rubber heels now has world-wide connections and systems of distribution, and skilled engineers and scientists have been at work for several years in industrial laboratories, working out compounds of rubber that will meet the needs of the business most exactly.

The party consisted of the Men's Bible Class of the Hoge Memorial Church of which Mr. Chamberlain was president for the last year, and the Women's class of which Mrs. Chamberlain was president.

The guests brought refreshments with them—after the serving of which appropriate speeches were made by Rev. Shields, Mr. W. H. Deems, teacher of Men's Bible class; Mr. A. ### AN ANSWER

Being Vice President of the West Broad Parent-Teachers' Organization and as a writer by the name of Mrs. I. C. Smith, has notified "Hilltopers" ('topers you will note') that said President and Vice President "know no more about their duties than some sixth year scholars," it becomes one to answer such a charge.

Without reflection on anyone, it may well be said that any organization may make amends and more nearly, fit community needs. It is being done rapidly by the W. Broad P. T. A. Mrs. Prior, the former President did a splendid service for a year. So did others.

Conditions have forced W. Broad St. School to shift scholars of a certain age to Highland School and many more to the John Burroughs. In the interest of all, this has relieved crowded condition in the schools. This meant a decrease in membership of the W. Broad P. T. A. but no decrease in the spirit of those who will carry on the fine work. One hundred scholars were transferred to Highland and 250 to John Burroughs.

Some excellent meetings have been held, many items of needed reform accomplished and much remains to be done. The pity is that so few parents have affiliated with the Association which is primarily theirs.

The remedy for slackened speed is for a better spirit of co-operation. Some of us learned in college athletics that "team play" is necessary if you wish to win. It is so here.

The Executive Committee of the West Broad School P. T. A. is composed of a fine group of wide-awake women—no men and one preacher! But to say that these same people are not capable or in earnest is totally unfounded and to the thinking parent, whether member of the P. T. A. or not, it will have little weight.

The W. Broad P. T. A. deeply appreciates the little "tempest in the teapot" occasioned by an ill-advised article and assures all truly interested parties that as an organization it is by no means "dying the death," for there are now 150 members.

The odious comparisons in the article answer themselves. To the sympathetic observer our invitation to all to "come and see" will be sufficient.

Rev. RICHARD E. SHIELDS,
2503 West Broad Street, Columbus, Ohio, March 22, 1922.

Mrs. Margaret Roberts, 77, widow of John E. Roberts, and mother of Charles E. Houx, 2518 W. Broad St., died Sunday of paralysis at her home near West Jefferson. She leaves besides a son, two daughters, two brothers, and two sisters. Funeral was Tuesday afternoon at the residence and burial at West Jefferson.

Clyde C. Ross of 497 S. Ogden Ave., died of tuberculosis Monday at St. Anthony's Hospital. He was an insurance agent for the Western and Southern Life Insurance Co.

Mrs. Charlotte Ruth Roberts, 29, wife of Charles Roberts, 93 Lechner Ave., died Tuesday at Grant Hospital following an operation. Besides her husband she leaves a daughter, aged 8 years; her mother, Mrs. McKenna; one brother, and a sister. She was a member of the Third Avenue M. E. Church and a Maccabee. Funeral Thursday at 10 a. m. at the home of her mother, 119 Hubbard Ave. Burial at Union Cemetery.

During the absence of Rev. and Mrs. C. F. Prior, someone entered their home at 101 Eldon Ave., last Saturday night, gaining admittance through a transom. They did not take anything except one or two small articles.

There will be many interesting features, among them, a string quartette composed of Frank Milliken, William Knox, William Bigham and Richard Rowland, accompanied by Mary Mullen. A playlet, "Six Cups of Chocolate" presented by the Dramatic Club, will be cleverly carried out by Hosea King, Mary Virginia Howat, Blanche and Frances Rose, Dorine Elliot, Lois Quamby and Margaret Morgan. About seventy-five pupils will appear in various capacities, some acting as ushers and stage assistants. You are invited.

Thursday evening, March 30th, Mrs. Corinne Cresson will give a Recital in the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Society. The program will consist of Readings, Impersonations, Monologues etc. Watch for a complete program in next week's "Hilltop Record." Everyone is cordially invited to attend and enjoy a splendid entertainment.

A silver offering will be taken.

I would like for every mother who has a child in second B, or second A class, Highland Ave. School, pay the teacher, Mrs. Booth a visit and see her splendid method of teaching and how nice they are getting along and how well they behave. Also the interest she has taken in the children by decorating the room with curtains, ferns, flowers, and other things too numerous to mention and feel she should be given all the encouragement and credit due her. ## HAS FIRST BIBLE PRINTED IN U. S.

Newberry Library in Chicago Also Possesses Parliament Act Ordering It.

TRANSLATED INTO RED TONGUE

Government Ordered Collection in England and Wales to Defray Cost of Propagating Gospel in New England.

Chicago.—The first Bible printed in the United States springs directly from a national solicitation of funds in England and Wales in a manner somewhat akin to the Liberty loan drives, according to George B. Utley, librarian of the Newberry library here. The library has both the first American Bible and the act of the English parliament which led to it.

The Bible was a translation into the tongue of the Massachusetts Indians. For years John Eliot, a Puritan fleeing from persecution, who landed 11 years after the Mayflower, had been sending back to England reports about missionary success among the Indians.

Ordered by Parliament.

When the Puritans came into power he found a friendly government, and in 1649, within six months after Charles I was executed, when Cromwell was supreme, parliament passed "An act for promoting and propagating the Gospel in New England." The act created a corporation consisting of 16 Londoners, which thereafter carried on the work.

But more especially it ordered "a general collection in all the countries, cities, towns and parishes of England and Wales." It required the ministers to read the act to their congregations and instructed them, with others, to "go with all convenient speed from house to house to every one of the inhabitants of the said parishes and places respectively, and to take the subscription of every such person in a schedule to be presented to them for that purpose and accordingly at the same time to collect and gather the same."

To Educate Red Brother.

Better education of the Indians was also named among the purposes of the corporation. Twenty-five years later there were four Indian towns with schools in Massachusetts and "the praying Indians" there numbered 4,000.

This collection ordered by parliament brought in about £11,000, it is reported.

Fourteen years later, in 1663 Eliot furnished the first complete Bible printed in the western hemisphere. Its title page bears the lines: "At the charge and with the consent of the Corporation in England for the Promotion of the Gospel Amongst the Indians in New England."

The place of printing was Cambridge, Mass., where 23 years before Eliot had helped compile the Bay Psalm book, the first book to come off the press, in what is now the United States.

MATRIMONY 'AD' FILLS HOUSE

Young Tenor in Rome Uses Ruse to Attract Women Hearers to Opera.

Rome.—Women's love of romance has been utilized for theatrical advertising by the agent of Sig. Umberto Rota, a tenor here. In the personal columns of several Rome newspapers the following appeared:

"Man of independent means and handsome appearance desires to marry young woman. Dowry unnecessary. He may be seen in one of the stage boxes at the Adriano theater on Saturday night.—Umberto Rota."

At the performance the theater was sold out to women of all degrees, who kept their gaze fixed not upon the stage, but on the boxes. As the latter remained empty they turned their attention to the program, where they found that Umberto Rota was a young tenor making his debut that evening.

LABRADOR ESKIMOS DYING

Have Been Exploited by Traders, Says Vice Governor of Northern Greenland.

Copenhagen.—Eskimos of Labrador appear to be a dying, or at least a deteriorating race, says Harold Lindow, vice governor of northern Greenland, who has just returned from a visit to the Eskimo settlements on the eastern coast of Labrador.

Mr. Lindow said the Eskimo of Labrador did not compare well with the Greenland Eskimo and that they were in great need of protection. He asserted that they were being exploited by unscrupulous traders and driven further north year after year.

IN BED TEN MONTHS A YEAR

Sisters Live Until Nearly One Hundred by Keeping to Their Couches Most of Time.

London.—Dr. Robert Pugh Rowlands declares that lying in bed is injurious to health. But the dictum probably had small effect on the two sisters of Brillat-Savarin, who looked after his country home for the famous epicure.

The aged women remained in bed for ten months of the year, rising two days before their brother was expected on his annual visit in September and living a normal life during his stay. When he left at the end of October they would say: "Adieu, Antheime, till next year. We are going back to bed."

And one of them lived to be ninety-eight and the other ninety-nine.

AIDING WAR VETERANS

Government Is Spending More Than $1,000,000 a Day.

Director of Veterans' Bureau Seeks Half-Billion to Divide Into Seven Composite Branches of Relief Work.

Washington.—More than $1,000,000 a day including Sunday, is being expended by the United States government for the former service men and their dependents, say government officials.

The 1922 budget estimate of expenditures to be made directly for the benefit of the former warriors, calls for $500,000,000. This huge sum will be divided Col C R Forbes, director of the United States veterans bureau, said, into seven composite branches of soldier relief work.

For vocational training, the sum of $107,500,000; for medical and hospital services, the sum of $64,000,000; for payments on war risk term insurance, the sum of $81,700,000; for United States government life insurance, the sum of $161,000,000; for retroactive government allowances on proved and extant claims, the sum of $2,000,000; for [illegible] and expenses, that is administration, the sum of $31,500,000.

In a certain home there was a 10c fine for each spot made on the table linen. Around Christmas Johnnie was mysteriously rubbing the tablecloth with his fingers. His sister saw him. "What are you doing?" she asked. "I'm making these two spots into one," said the financier.

TEACHES AMERICANISM FREE

Maine Woman Works With Adults After Her School Is Dismissed.

Lille, Me.—Inspired by Maine educational leaders to do what she could for Americanization of her neighbors, Miss Leona Cyr has done pioneer work in Aroostook county along this line. She organized an evening class for adults in the rural school which she taught this fall and winter. Most are well-to-do farmers, but illiterate.

A twelve-week term was arranged, kerosene lights were provided for night work, and ten pupils registered the first day, later twenty. One woman of 50 years rides a mile and a half to school, although she is the mother of seven children.

The men pick up English by learning to talk about farm implements and matters relating to their interests at home.

Clothes and the Professor

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

© 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Once more Jean read through the letter which had arrived to find her in a mood of despondency most unusual. Like a gleam of sunshine it had brightened the gloomy prospect of a Christmas away from home. To be sure, living with one's step-aunt didn't make much of a home, but even that was better than the dismal, deserted campus and the empty dormitory whose walls still echoed with the jolly laughter of departing girls.

And then had arrived this charming note from one of the university's most attractive graduates:

"My Dear Miss Gray:

"It will afford us the greatest possible pleasure to have you spend the holidays with us. We are entertaining most informally and will expect you Christmas Eve.

"Cordially yours,
"MARJORIE HOLDEN."

"Most informally!" Jean's brow clouded. Instinct told her that those two words had been inserted to intimate that her hostess did not expect her to come equipped with evening gowns and opera capes. Only—Jean had so much less than that! Just a few plain waists and a shabby skirt or two and shoes that needed constant daily renewals with the blacking brush to make them even passably respectable. Even "most informally" guests would have blouses and silk stockings and shimmery underthings.

"I—can't—go!" Jean winked back unaccustomed tears and stared hard at a picture on the wall in front of her. As her vision cleared she became aware that she was gazing at the group photograph taken after the last Dramatic Society play. What fun she had had! For one brief evening she had been a "star" and worn truly becoming clothes.

If only—Jean sat suddenly upright with eyes that sparkled. "I'll go to Held Out His Arms.

Mrs. Holden's and wear those clothes!" she cried ecstatically. Jean's inspiration was born of the fact that the Dramatic society had issued a recent edict. Clothes worn in the annual plays were to be purchased and become the property of the organization and so be always available for future performances. Jean was property mistress and held the key to the wardrobe that contained them.

"If Mrs. Holden had not been abroad when we gave 'Nancy's English Cousin' this little stunt might have been impossible," mused Jean as, the following day, she folded and packed the smart little serge dress she had worn in the third act. Three changes there had been, noted respectively in the stage directions as "a one-piece serge," "a simple party frock" and "a striking outdoor costume." Jean took all three.

Late Christmas eve found Jean sinking blissfully to rest, prepared to dream of the coming good times with the jolly crowd which had met her so hospitably at the station. Lucky girl, that for a few brief hours at least she was utterly happy.

For the following morning at the gay, holly-decked breakfast table Mrs. Holden unsuspectingly turned Jean's happiness to ashes. "My brother, Jean, who came after you had gone upstairs last night. Why, you know each other!"

"Of course, we know each other!" smiled a singularly attractive young man. "I coached the play in which Miss Gray played a demure little English girl—and well do I remember her in the part!"

Yes, it seemed that Cary Endicott, who had made "Nancy's English Cousin" the success it had been, was Mrs Holden's brother. Jean had known him simply as the popular young assistant professor from a neighboring boys' college. And he remembered her well in the part. So, of course, he would remember the "one-piece serge" and the "simple party frock," to say nothing of the "striking outdoor costume!"

In the days that followed the girl tried not to imagine that Cary watched her with a perpetually quizzical expression. It seemed to her that she could read his very thoughts; could imagine him saying: "Ah, yes, the young lady took advantage of the fact that the girls were away to tog herself out in stage properties. How did she expect to get away with it?"

Yet these suspicions were unjust. Whatever the young man's inner thoughts, his outward attitude was one that any girl might have approved. And at the same time, unobtrusively, he endeavored to be Jean's partner in the hikes and skiing expeditions and sleigh rides with which the hours were enlivened.

On one of the very last days of vacation the crowd set out on snowshoes across the hills. Cary had managed matters so that he and Jean lagged far behind the others. Suddenly, in a snowy but sheltered hollow, as the rest topped a distant summit and disappeared, Cary turned right about face and held out his arms. "Jean, darling, will you be my wife?" The abruptness of his words did not rob them of effectiveness.

Jean flushed furiously. "I—oh—why, how can you—after—after these clothes?"

Assistant Profesor Endicott's face expressed nothing beyond utter mystification. Then he shook his head. "I'm afraid—maybe I'm dense, but—"

And Jean had to explain, her slim hands clenching themselves within the old little English muff which was part of her "striking outdoor costume."

When she had finished Cary just stood for a moment regarding her ever so gently, ever so tenderly. Then, "Didn't you know, you funny girl, that men can live with clothes year in and year out and never notice them? It's the people that wear them that count."

And happy Jean, snuggled close in his arms, knew that he had spoken the truth.

A Fearsome Creature.

"Do you suppose winter or summer is better suited for the output of poetry?"

"All seasons are alike to me," replied the grand and gloomy young man with the shell-rimmed spectacles and the luxurious locks.

"Indeed, sir?"

"What is a little snow or a little rain, a little sunshine or a cloud to one whose soul is attuned to the infinite?"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Mirthful Afternoon.

"What's going on over at the Gawker residence?"

"Mrs. Gawker is entertaining a few fashionable acquaintances."

"Cards?"

"Ostensibly cards, but most of the entertainment is provided by Mrs. Gawker's grammatical errors and so-[illegible]."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

TO LINK NORTH AND BLACK SEAS

Plan to Cut Steamship Waterway That Would Be Great Help to Commerce.

ACROSS EUROPE BY WATER

Germany Is Considering Project of Connecting Up the Rhine and the Danube for Ocean-going Vessels.

Washington, D. C.—"Instinctively one links the Mississippi and the Missouri rivers; years to come may find us regarding the Danube and the Rhine in the same way," is the comment of a National Geographic society bulletin upon the reports of a plan to cut a steamship waterway from the North sea to the Black sea.

"As for a 'waterway across Europe'—such a waterway already exists, though travelers through a small section of it might have to resort to very small craft. Information about the condition of the canalized portion of this trans-European water route is not readily available, since the linking of the Rhine and the Danube occurs in Germany.

New Conceptions of Europe.

"The very fact that we classify the legend-laden Rhine in one mental pigeonhole, and the romantic, castled Danube in another, makes the announcement of a 'waterway across Europe' come upon us with the impact of a fresh idea. Just as war brought about political changes in Europe, so peace is bringing economic changes. Hence, if Germany carries out the project she is considering, we will have to think of a Europe cut through with a water route, just as we have learned to think of a Europe with Turkey almost gone, a Poland with a boundary, and the new names of Czechoslovakia and Jugo-Slavia conspicuous upon its map.

"A present water route across Europe—and others are possible with very short portages—lies along the Rhine to Mains, up the Rhine's tributary, Main, to Bamberg, thence through the Regnitz, into the Ludwig canal to the Altmuhl, which empties into the Danube at Kelheim.

Where Two Rivers Are Linked.

"In your mind's eye, even without a map, you can recall two focal points of this route, Frankfort, on the Main, and Ratisbon (or Regensburg) on the Danube. Vessels of more than 1,000 tons can go up the Rhine and Main to Frankfort; and vessels between 400 and 1,000 tons can go up the Danube as far as Ratisbon. Kelheim, the Danube end of the small river-canal link with the Rhine, is only 12 miles southwest of Ratisbon. The improvement of the Danube to Kelheim would offer no great difficulties. Above Frankfort, to Wurzburg, vessels between 400 and 1,000 tons can traverse the Main.

"The trouble with this route, even with channels deep enough to carry larger steamers from Wurzburg to Ratisbon, is the extremely circuitous course between the Rhine and the Danube. From Frankfort the route forms an almost perfect 'W' and then trails off like a careless flourish through Nuremberg to Ratisbon. A projected shortening of this route contemplates passing the confluence of the Rhine and the Main, continuing up the Rhine to Mannheim, thence into the Neckar and into the proposed canal from that point to connect with the Danube near Offingen.

"Completion of the project for this deep waterway across Europe would make the Rhine-Danube route one of the most important commercial highways of the world—ranking in economic importance with the Panama and Suez canals, and in extent with the Mississippi-Missouri channel and the tremendous navigable length of the Amazon. The Black-to-North-sea trip would be a journey of nearly 2,200 miles. The high water navigation head of the Missouri, in Montana, is 8,500 miles from the Gulf of Mexico, while ocean-going steamers may ascend the Amazon for 2,300 miles."

Calf Hops Like Rabbit.

Jefferson, Ga.—A heifer calf born here has only one eye, and no tail and, although she boasts four well developed feet and legs, hops like a rabbit instead of walking like heifers are generally supposed to walk. Outside of that her owner, George Williamson, says she is a pretty good calf.

LIKES HIS OWN POEMS

Young Shah of Persia Seems to Make Hit With Himself.

Admits His Stuff May Be Little Better Than That of Omar Khayyam —Is Something of Linguist— Also Good Tennis Player.

London.—The young shah of Persia who recently left his capital, Teheran, for another trip to Europe, is said to hold a high opinion of himself as a poet. In fact, according to a story told here, he puts himself in a class with Omar Khayyam and considers himself, if anything, a trifle better than his great countryman.

As the story is told by a London paper, a British minister at Teheran called on the shah at the request of English admirers of the great Persian poet and asked that better care be taken of his grave at Nishapur where, as Omar predicted, "the north wind still scatters roses on his tomb."

But the shah could not be impressed with this need. Persia, he declared, had lots of poets and he, himself, was possibly a little better poet than Omar.

Ahmed Mirza, shah of Persia, is only twenty-four years old and this, some say, may account for this opinion. He knows English and Russian and talks French fluently and accurately and has been reported as eager to learn western ways and institutions.

In appearance his majesty is short and stout. He takes a lively interest in sports, plays a good lawn tennis game and, in order to encourage open air sports in Persia, founded the Imperial Sports club at Teheran, placing at its disposal a piece of crown land.

His father, Mahomed Ali, lost his throne in consequence of his attempts to stamp out the constitutional system in Persia and regain the absolutism of his ancestors.

Ahmed, who was then in his twelfth year, was proclaimed sovereign in 1909 and his father was sent into exile on the famous island of Prinkipo, where President Wilson proposed that the allies hold a conference with the Russians, as a part of the after-war peace negotiations.

He has been credited with having kept Persia from taking the side of the central powers in the World war.

Last Sunday Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church Sunday School elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: superintendent, Herbert G. Deems; assistant superintendent, J. W. Dinsmore; treasurer, Donald Lear; recording secretary, Fred C. Ault; enrollment secretary, C. Vernon Frederick; pianist, Robert G. Earl; assistant pianist, Mary Porter; Home Department, Mrs. Wagner; Cradle Roll, Miss Anna May Parnett; Primary Department, Miss Catherine Sperry; Junior Department, R. C. Kadel; Intermediate and Senior Department, Miss Dorothy King.

Having noticed several items, about the W. B. P. T. A. and listened to many comments, on same subject would like to add a few of my own to the collection. Have been a member of the W. B. P. T. A. since the first day it organized, several years ago and during that time known every one who has been made an officer of the society, or been a member and a finer, more sincere, set of women could not be found anywhere. Now Mrs. I. C. Smith's name is not on the membership list of the P. T. A. at W. Broad.

Now Mrs. Smith if you feel that you could help and you surely must think so, come out and give your name to the society and be a real helper, for the few officers can not accomplish great things by themselves, but must have the help and co-operation of all the parents in the school district.

West Broad School is the one school of Columbus, its principal, Miss Judd, and the teachers are the finest, women to be found in any school, so let us, every one, help and work, and not just talk.

In a small village in Ireland the mother of a soldier met the village priest, who asked her if she had bad news. "Sure, I have," she said. "Pat has been killed."

"Oh, I am very sorry," said the priest. "Did you receive word from the War Office?"

"No," she said, "I received word from himself."

The priest looked perplexed, and said, "But how is that?"

"Sure," she said, "here is the letter; read it for yourself."

The letter said, "Dear Mother—I am now in the Holy Land."

NEW INVENTION AID TO AIRMEN

Records More Accurately the Air Pressure of Certain Surfaces of Planes.

TELLS OF RESULTS ACHIEVED

Important Facts Determined by Use of This Device Will Prove of Great Value to Science of Aeronautics.

Washington.—A new manometer or instrument for recording air pressure on wing and tail surfaces of airplanes at different points simultaneously has been designed and developed by F. H. Norton, an engineer of the Langley Memorial laboratory at Langley field, Virginia, it was announced by the national advisory committee for aeronautics.

The first experiments were undertaken by the laboratory for the navy department in order to determine the distribution of pressure over the horizontal tail surfaces of an airplane and to analyse the relation of this pressure to structural loads and longitudinal stability and were conducted on full-sized planes in the air and on models in the wind tunnels.

Old Method Described.

The old method consisted in using a horizontal tail surface inside of which rubber tubes, connected with a series of holes on the surface, led to a multiple liquid manometer. The several tubes of the manometer registered the pressure at each change of speed or air pressure and the results were recorded by an automatic camera which photographed the height of the liquid in the tubes every few seconds.

To study various pressures in accelerated flights or "stunting," it was impossible to use the old liquid manometer and consequently the new manometer was developed, substituting the deflection of metal diaphragms and a means of automatically recording their deflection for the liquid manometer and the camera respectively.

Tells of Results Achieved.

Among the results achieved by the investigators are:

That the low average load per square foot on the usual type of tail plane doing steady flight is so small that it could not in any conceivable way cause failure.

That the records taken of the same pressures on tail surfaces in accelerated flights demonstrated that there was no large increase in these forces.

A complete manometer for making pressure distribution tests has been sent to the army air service engineering laboratory at McCook field, Dayton, Ohio, for experiment by army experts.

It was also learned that the Langley laboratory contemplates a further study to ascertain the pressure on different parts of wing and tail surfaces at very high speed, in an effort to learn, if possible, the causes of several accidents which occurred in aviation races, where the planes were making very high speeds and for which no cause has ever been determined.

BLAME WIRELESS FOR SPOOKS

Fire Underwriters See Stations as Explaining Scare in Antigonish County, Nova Scotia.

Halifax, N. S.—The proximity of radio stations is the latest explanation of Antigonish county spooks, which have driven Alex MacDonald and family from home and baffled investigators.

Fire underwriters are discussing suggestions that the mysterious fires have been due to electric phenomena, caused by powerful wireless stations at Glace bay.

Several other families in Antigonish county are now reported to have been driven from their homes by mysterious fires during the last dozen years.

Inquiries received here indicate a small army of American newspaper men is preparing to follow Dr. Walter Franklin Prince, director of the American Institute for Scientific Research, who has accepted an invitation to undertake an investigation of the mystery.

1920 FARM LOSS BIG

Agriculturist Earned Less in 1920 Than in Any of the Last Ten Years Survey Shows—Suffer Heavily.

New York.—The American farmer, who rose to unprecedented heights of prosperity in 1918 and 1919, earned less in 1920 than he has earned in any year of the last ten, if his income is reckoned in dollars having the same purchasing power as in 1913, according to estimates made public by the national bureau of economic research.

Reckoned in actual dollars paid to him in 1920, the farmer's income, as shown by the report, was less than in three previous years, but was greater than in the seven years from 1910 to 1916, inclusive.

The figures, taken from a detailed report of an exhaustive nation-wide survey, showed that the country's 6,450,000 farmers in 1920 earned approximately $7,200,000,000—a drop of $3,650,000,000 from their income for the year before.

The farmers, who represent about 16 per cent of the gainfully employed, have received during the last decade a share in the total national income varying between 12.3 per cent in 1911 and 17.4 in 1917 and 1918, until 1920, when it dropped to 10.9 per cent.

The final figures for the total income in 1920 can only be approximated, owing to the delay in publishing the income tax returns.

"When these figures are translated into terms of the purchasing power of "1913," it is again seen that the purchasing power of the farmers was at its lowest ebb in 1920," says the report.

An official summary of the report adds:

"It will be seen that in 1920 the farmers fell faster than the rest of those gainfully employed. They had further to fall.

"What the results may have been in 1921 can not yet be determined, because, while farmers again suffered heavy losses, the rest of the country also ran into a period of severe depression."

YANKS RUN GERMAN RAILWAY

Branch Lines in Occupied Area on Rhine Operated by American Soldiers.

Coblenz.—Branch lines of German government railways within the occupied area are being operated by several American engineer battalions as part of a course of instruction of the army railway school established some time ago by officers of the American forces in Germany.

The train crews are made up entirely of American soldiers and even the train dispatching on the short lines is done by members of the organization, who are taking courses in rail road telegraphy.

The platoon of Company A, Sixteenth Engineers battalion, has been operating three trains daily between Kreuzberg and Junkerath in the Ahr valley, near Coblenz, several months and has never had a serious accident.

DIG UP MUMMY OF FAT MAN

Workmen in Philadelphia Find Body Buried in 1792 Is Preserved Like a Mummy.

Philadelphia.—The mummified body of a fat man, an early resident of Philadelphia, is being preserved at the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology as a rare example of adipocere, a substance which is a soft, waxy mass resembling soap. According to officials the man was Wilhelm von Ellenberger, who lived here when it was the capital of the United States and George Washington was President.

In 1792 Von Ellenberger fell victim to the yellow fever plague and was buried in the potters' field. Many years of burial in the moist soil of the field gradually converted the body into an adipocere mummy and when the field was turned into a public square the body was exhumed and identified.

Surprised House Cat Hatches Out Chickens

North Baltimore, O.—A house cat belonging to Mrs. Fred Loomis of Perrysburg, O., is the wonder of the town. The cat has just hatched out two chickens.

The other day Mrs. Loomis heard a noise coming from the cat's nest. She investigated and found two baby chicks.

Her theory is that a hen used the cat's nest for her nest, while the cat furnished the incubation. Anyway, Mrs. Cat is puzzled over her new family.

RIPEN GRAPEFRUIT IN COLD

Federal Agricultural Experts Find New Way Produces Better Product.

Washington.—Grapefruit appearing on the American breakfast table may in the future be that coaxed to ripeness while reposing in a frigid temperature of some refrigerating plant.

Department of Agriculture experts announced after completion of a series of experiments begun in 1917 that citrus fruit will ripen off the tree, and, like pears and apples, will develop a superior eating quality after a period of one to three months in cold storage. The fruit, however, must be suitably "cured" before being placed in cold storage.

The government experts found, it was said, that while the sugar content of the fruit remained about the same, the acid content deceased markedly during the storage and apparently the bitterness was broken down.

Less Manila Hemp Produced.

Manila, P. I.—Total production of Manila hemp in 1921 was 602,822 bales, compared with 1,051,601 bales in 1920, a reduction of about 30 per cent. The decrease in production is ascribed to the poor demand, especially in the United States, which is the chief consumer of hemp.

EXTEND AIR ROUTES

All Nations Making Effort to Develop Civil Aviation.

British Observer Says 1922 Appears to Be Crucial Year in the Extension of Commercial Airways—Air Travel Popular.

London.—All countries are making great efforts to extend their commercial airways this year, writes Maj. W. T. Blake, the aeronautical correspondent of the Daily News. Indeed, it appears the crucial year for civil aviation.

In addition to new air service in England from London to Manchester and from London to Ireland, two new companies have been approved by the air ministry to operate continental services. Of these Daimler Hire, Ltd., will operate between London and Paris with a possible extension to Switzerland, whilst between London and Brussels the Aerial Routes syndicate, Ltd., proposes to operate.

The Instone Air line and Handley Page Transport will continue their services to Paris, whilst one or the other will probably start operations on the Dutch route.

France, in addition to maintaining her present services to London, Brussels, Amsterdam, Czechoslovakia, Warsaw, Morocco, etc., has arranged to open up the route from Prague to Constantinople via Budapest and Bucharest. This will be a branch of the Paris-Warsaw service, the junction being Prague. A second route to Constantinople also will be opened up by the company, which at present operates the service from Bordeaux-Toulouse, Montpelier. This service will be definitely extended to Marseilles and Genoa, and will continue to Constantinople if circumstances warrant a further extension.

Denmark has recently sent a mission to Germany with a view to investigating the possibilities of purchasing large passenger-carrying machines for the opening up of various Scandinavian routes.

Portugal—which so far has displayed little practical interest in commercial flying—is opening up a service from Lisbon to Paris via Valladolid and Bordeaux. The capital of this company is two million escudos, at the normal rate of exchange about £375,000. This will, of course, bring London into direct aerial communication with Lisbon. Other Portuguese air services contemplated are from Lisbon to Oporto; from Lisbon to Madrid; from Lisbon to Faro.

Additional links in the European system which are being opened up by various companies will enable the aerial traveler to proceed from London to Algeria via Paris and Marseilles and from London to Morocco via Paris, Toulouse and Barcelona. The new Portuguese route will give a direct service between London and Lisbon and the new French service will give a direct route from London to Constantinople.

England is already linked up by air with Brussels, Amsterdam, Copenhagen and Berlin, so that there are now very few European capitals which cannot be reached by regular air services in, at the outside, two days' air travel.

CARBON DIOXIDE FOR GAS VICTIM

Public Health Service Tests Method for Efficiency in Mines and Elevators.

CARBON MONOXIDE IS OUSTED

Breathing Is Stimulated by Use of Inhalator, Filling the Lungs With Oxygen—Inventor Sees Danger in Its Use.

New York.—Persons overcome by illuminating gas are being treated with carbon dioxide and oxygen by the United States public health service in a series of studies to determine whether the carbon dioxide treatment should be introduced into mines and grain elevators where the life-saving devices are prescribed by the United States government.

From each person treated by the new method, which was devised by Prof. Yandell Henderson of Yale, working under the United States bureau of mines, a few drops of blood are taken at the moment when the inhaler is first applied, and a few drops more are taken at the end of 20 minutes' use of this appuratus.

"The samples of blood are sent to Doctor Henderson at Yale," said Dr. Stuart Scott, who has been assigned by the United States public health service to take charge of the test of the invention in this city, where it is being used for the first time on human victims of gas poisoning.

"There the samples are being analyzed to discover what percentage of carbon monoxide has been removed from the blood in the 20 minutes during which the inhalator is used. It will take a long course of experiments to determine this. If it is finally shown that the use of carbon dioxide mixed with oxygen is the best antidote for asphyxiation, the inhalator will probably replace the different varieties of pulmotor now in use in government service."

Used to Stimulate Breathing.

The function of the carbon dioxide is to stimulate breathing, which becomes extremely feeble in a patient overcome by gas. The strong breathing keeps the lungs filled with oxygen, and the faster the oxygen enters the lungs the more rapidly the blood is cleared of the carbon monoxide.

In Bellevue and other hospitals a number of experiments have been carried on in the administration of carbon dioxide to patients who have been long under ether during operations. The use of carbon dioxide with great care in such cases is said to speed up breathing, so that the patients quickly clear the ether from their systems and suffer less than the usual ill effects from it.

The average case of gas poisoning is not the best kind on which to show the beneficial effect of the inhalator, according to Doctor Henderson, because of the fact that such cases have usually been under asphyxiation for many hours. During this time, lack of oxygen in the body often produces degenerative changes in the nerve and other body cells. The mere removal of the carbon monoxide and the restoration of the patient's breathing apparatus cannot repair the damage already done throughout the system of the patient.

The great benefit claimed for the use of the carbon dioxide process is in the early treatment of acute cases of gas poisoning, of firemen asphyxiated by smoke and similar cases of monoxide poisoning. Profound harmful changes may take place in the body of the sufferer within a short time in such cases, and slow processes of resuscitation do not save the patient from after effects which may linger for life in disturbed nerve centers and constitutional troubles.

The use of carbon dioxide in the resuscitation process, however, is believed to be capable of clearing the blood so quickly that a person suffering from severe asphyxiation may recover without ill effects if the remedy is used quickly.

Would Bar Inhalator's Use.

Even if the inhalator is a perfect device, Doctor Henderson asserts that it would be better if all such devices were prohibited by law, because their effect is to prevent workers in mines and elsewhere from learning how to restore breathing in an asphyxiated person without the use of instruments.

"The standpoint which seems to me to be justified by eight years of experience, ever since our commissioner first investigated the matter," he said, "is that, even if we had an ideally perfect apparatus for giving artificial respiration, it would still be better to discourage and even forbid the manufacture, sale, use and introduction of such apparatus, because it leads to delay, and thus more deaths—deaths which should and could be restorations."

Dear Friend:

No doubt you have heard of the destructive fire on January 29th, at the Friends' Rescue Home, by which the third floor was destroyed with all the contents, including fifteen beds and other furniture, and nearly all the clothing of the girls, as well as that of the matron. The damage by water on the first and second floors was considerable. Our loss was only partly covered by insurance. It is evident to you that our needs are many, so, as in the past, we are counting on you to help us by your prayers and offerings.

Make all checks payable to Friends' Rescue Home, P. O. Box 937, Columbus, Ohio. Yours in His service, EVANGELINE REAMS.

Finder of $7 in 1865 Now Makes Restitution

Conneautville, Pa.—Henry C. Moulthrop of Conneautville has received a most remarkable "conscience" letter from the neighboring town of Albion. It is from a man who says he is a veteran of the Civil war and explains that on returning from the war in 1865 he was "broke." In a "grocery and beer shop" in Conneautville he found a pocketbook containing $7 and a card indicating that it was the property of F. Moulthrop.

He now desires to make restitution to the son of the man who owned the pocketbook. He adds $1 for interest, which hardly meets the interest requirements but the recipient thinks he can stand the loss

FIGHT ON PNEUMONIA

Army Doctors Seek Vaccine to Prevent Dread Disease.

Mortality in Modern War Could Be Cut One-Half If Preventive for Pneumonia and Other Respiratory Diseases Is Found.

Chicago.—Merritt W. Ireland, surgeon general of the United States army, declared that the mortality in modern war could be cut virtually one-half if a preventive for pneumonia and other respiratory diseases could be found.

As a corollary he asserted the elimination of the menace of pneumonia would cause such a rapid increase in the population of the world that in a short time we wouldn't know what to do with the surplus.

His statements were made at the Congress hotel, where he was a guest of medical men attending the eighteenth annual congress on medical education, public health and hospitals. He said they are based on figures compiled from the death lists of Americans in the great war.

These figures disclose that while 37,000 soldiers were killed on the battlefield, 45,000 died from pneumonia in the hospitals and training camps, he said. Of these 42,000 died in four months.

"The greatest problem before medical men today is finding a vaccine or preparation which will prevent the contraction of diseases which lead to pneumonia and death," General Ireland said. "This controlled, deaths from other diseases, especially in warfare, would be negligible.

"Physicians all over the country are bending their best efforts to the solution of this problem. In the army we have been making extensive experiments and it is possible now that we are on the track of a preparation which will lead to the desired results.

"Within the last few weeks army physicians have been trying out a new vaccine in the army and some of the reports are encouraging. That, however, is all we can say. It will take months of work before anything definite will be known.

"If war should be declared tomorrow, I would not need to have a single cot prepared for patients suffering from typhoid fever and malaria, the diseases which worked such havoc in the Spanish-American war. These diseases are under control. But under present conditions we would have to make a huge outlay both in money, beds, and medicines for the fight against respiratory diseases."

IS JUST 103 YEARS YOUNG

Mrs. Lutu C. Daniel, [illegible] inmate of the Arkansas Confederate home near Little Rock, Ark, is just one hundred and three years of age. She is anything but a "has been," having a younger outlook on life than many women half her age. She makes all her own clothes, even to the Irish crochet lace on her dainty collars. She is a stranger to digestive or other ills. Her lightness of foot is phenomenal.

Idle Husband Given a Washtub Sentence

Judge George R. Heffley of Huntington, W. Va., established a precedent when he sentenced James Alexander to duty at his wife's washtubs. Alexander was arrested on his wife's complaint that he failed to support her and that he was dependent on her earnings from washing clothes. Arraigned in court, Alexander pleaded lack of employment and was sentenced to help his wife do the washing until he found steady employment.

FAITH

"Can it be right for me to go
On in this dark uncertain way?
Say 'I believe' and yet not know
Whether my sins are put away?

"Not know my trespasses forgiven
Until I meet Him in the air?
Not know that I shall get to heaven
Until I wake and find me there?

"Not know my state till on my brow
Beams the celestial diadem?
Why surely, all the world will know
That I'm a pardoned sinner then.

"Must clouds and darkness veil my brow
Until I dwell with saints in light?
And must I walk in darkness now
Because I cannot walk by sight?

"And shall I just begin to say,
'Father, Thine every word is true,'
And cast my doubts and fears away
When all the world will own it too?

"Is this the way to treat the God
Who bids me trust and love Him now?
Is this the way to use the Word
Given to guide me here below?

"How can I forth to sinners go,
And tell of grace so rich and free.
If all the while I do not know
Whether that grace has smiled on me?

"How can it be my lot to dwell
On the rich power of Jesus' blood,
While all the time I cannot tell
That it has sealed my peace with God?

"How can I be like Christ below,
How like my Lord in witness shine,
Unless with conscious joy I know
His Father and His God as mine?

"Oh, crush this cruel unbelief!
These needless shameful doubts remove
And suffer me no more to grieve
The God whom I do really love."

Pigs Milk Cow.

Luray, Va.—The mysterious milking every night for some time of a cow belonging to David Baker, a farmer of this county, has just been explained. Keeping a constant watch on the cow for a night revealed the fact that several pigs were responsible. The pigs were found standing on their hind legs pulling and tugging at their breakfast.

Boy Knocks Man's Pipe in Haymow; Barn Burned

John L. Hayward of West Bridgewater, Mass., was enjoying an after-breakfast smoke at the door of his barn when a boy in a passing automobile threw a snowball. It knocked the pipe out of Hayward's mouth. While Hayward pursued the boy, burning tobacco from the pipe set fire to the hay in the mow. The barn and dairy were destroyed, with a loss of $2,200.

PROF. OUT AS COEDS POWDER

California University Instructor May Return If Girls Drop Vanity Cases.

Berkeley, Cal.—Diplomatic negotiations have been opened to have Alwin Thaler, associate English professor at the University of California, return to the freshmen class whence he abruptly walked out because certain girl students would not stop powdering their noses.

"Yes, I admit I walked out," Prof. Thaler said. "I asked them to put aside their vanity cases and attend to their work and they just giggled at me and powdered away all the harder."

The gigglers, it is reported, have agreed to park their vanity boxes outside and the professor is expected to return to the class at once.

TEST EYES OF MILLION KIDS

Vision of All Pupils in New York Public Schools Examined in One Day by Physicians.

New York.—Nearly 1,000,000 boys and girls of New York's public schools had their eyes tested in one day recently. It was health day in the schools, and the Eyesight Conservation Council of America cooperated with the school authorities in arranging the wholesale eye testing, and distributed 50,000 copies of a pamphlet on the care of the eyes.

Teachers in the schools will cooperate in the examinations for defects of vision. Ears, teeth, nutrition and nasal breathing will also be tested.

Goes Too Far for Data.

New York.—Seeking data for his book, "The Hereafter," Thomas W. Weggielus of Brooklyn, a twenty-three year-old chemist, swallowed what he thought was just enough anaesthetic to take him to death's portals. The book will never be finished for young Weggielus miscalculated the dose and the portals swung wide for him.

AIR "CHATTER" NOW POPULAR

Wireless Telephone Receiving Stations Are Rapidly Growing in Number.

MILLIONS BY END OF YEAR

Washington Keeps No Record of Receiving Stations, but Officials Estimate Huge Number Will Soon Be in Existence.

Washington.—Before the end of 1922 there will be installed throughout the United States a minimum of 1,000,000 receiving apparatus to pick up the "chatter" that is being broadcasted daily through the air by radio, so government officials in Washington estimate.

No license and no record is required of receiving stations and there is no way of knowing just how many there are, but where there were only about 25,000 a year ago it is believed there are at least 200,000 now, and of that number fully half have broken into the radio game in the past thirty days.

Developing Radio Operators.

Washington has never witnessed anything like the way the wireless telephone has caught the imagination of the American people. All such matters come under D. B. Carson, commissioner of navigation in the Department of Commerce, Washington, who is literally deluged with applications for licenses for sending stations, especially the big broadcasting plants.

The big growth has come within the past month since the few successful demonstrations on a large scale of the wireless telephone. Prior to this the department conducted propaganda to interest amateurs to break into the game, so the nation would have a reserve of radio operators who knew the game. Now it can hardly answer the thousands of queries that come in.

Manufacturers of receiving apparatus for the wireless telephone report that they cannot begin to fill the orders and are doubling their output every few weeks, while the turning out of homemade apparatus is being undertaken by the inventive American boy.

Farmer Will Benefit Most.

As government officials in Washington see it, perhaps the biggest benefit from this new and marvelous development will accrue to the farmer in reducing his isolation. Some months back the Department of Agriculture began broadcasting market reports through postal stations at six points. Since then three state universities and a half dozen newspapers have taken up the proposition.

IODINE LEADS AS ANTISEPTIC

Especially Preferred by Physicians Engaged in Industrial Work, Conference Board Finds.

New York.—Iodine still holds first place as a skin and wound disinfectant in surgical technic, particularly in the industrial medical field. Such objections as have been raised to it were against the danger of burns and the discomfort it causes rather than against its efficiency as a sterilizing agent. In spite of the great popularity attained by chlorin compounds in the treatment of war wounds, iodine still holds its general popularity and favor in medical circles in the treatment of injuries in civil life.

The Conference Board of Physicians in Industry, which acts as adviser to the National Industrial Conference board, 10 East Thirty-ninth street, on medical problems in industry, recently investigated the extent in which iodine is used as a wound disinfectant in industrial work, the strength in which it is used and the method of preliminary cleansing of the wound before the application of iodine and dressings.

Replies were received from 66 physicians, all of whom were doing industrial work or surgery closely allied to industry. Forty-five replied that they used a solution of five per cent strength or less and twenty used U. S. P. or greater strength. A few industrial physicians said they did not use iodine, or only sparingly. These men preferred such disinfectants as dichloramin-T, picric acid, Dakin's solution and similar products. The objection to iodine was that it caused burns too frequently.

Several physicians emphasized the importance of having the skin perfectly dry before iodine is applied.

ALASKA LEADS U. S. IN WEALTH

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NEXT

Southern Agricultural States Are Well Down the List—New York Leads in Total Returns—Millionnaires Decrease.

Washington.—Interesting bits of information relating to American incomes are included in the Treasury department's report covering returns for the calendar year 1919, which has just been made public.

Contrary to popular opinion the largest percentage of returns according to population was not from the wealthy industrial centers, but from Alaska and the District of Columbia. The territory's showing—17.17 per cent—was explained by the number of individuals operating their own business, while that of the District of Columbia—13.40 per cent—was believed to have resulted from the high ratio of government employees with salaries of more than $1,000 a year.

The southern agricultural states invariably were far down the list. Mississippi citizens made returns comprising only 1.53 per cent of the total population; North Carolina, 1.45 per cent, and Alabama, 1.74.

New York led in total returns with more than $5,000,000.

Sources of Revenue.

The analysis made by the treasury of the sources of income showed that those in the $1,000-$2,000 class obtained 77 per cent of their personal revenue from wages and salaries, 5.5 per cent from rents and royalties, 1.4 per cent from dividends and 4.7 from interest on investments.

This was contrasted with the taxpayers with incomes of $1,000,000 who drew only 1.34 per cent from salaries, 23 per cent from partnerships, 11 per cent from sale of real estate, stocks, etc., 6 per cent from rents and royalties, 38 per cent from dividends and 11 per cent from interest on investments.

Deductions permitted by the government also showed a wide variance, amounting to 7.47 per cent for incomes between $1,000 and $2,000 and 20.4 per cent for incomes of $2,000,000 and over.

Agriculture in Lead.

Agriculture and related industries comprised more than 31 per cent of those making returns, "trade" 26 per cent and public service 22.

Corporations reporting "no net income" totaled 110,564; the aggregate deficit in this class was $995,000,000. Seventy-one per cent of the firms engaged in mining and quarrying declared they had made no profit in 1919, against 46 per cent in agriculture and related lines and 13 per cent in textiles.

Interesting changes in the financial status of certain taxpayers were noted in the report. One group of 561 each who reported incomes of under $100,000 in 1914 was reorganized in 1919 so that only 150 remained in that bracket; 149 returned incomes of up to $300,000, 205 up to $1,000,000 and eight over that figure.

On the other hand 57 selected taxpayers, who paid on incomes of $1,000,000 and over in 1914, dwindled progressively to 23 in 1919; eight of those "lost" dropped back to the $100,000 class.

PLAGUE IN SANTO DOMINGO

225 Smallpox Deaths Occur in One Week—American Red Cross Rushes Relief.

Washington.—Cabled reports to the American Red Cross and the Navy department say that an epidemic of smallpox is raging in Santo, Meca and La Vega, Dominican Republic, S. A. Mitchell, field director of the Red Cross in Santo Domingo, telegraphs that there are 22,000 cases of the disease in these places and that 225 deaths occurred in one week. American marines stationed in Santo Domingo are not affected.

Director Mitchell, with the backing of the United States military governor, requested that $2,000,000 be sent for food. The money was allotted immediately by the Red Cross. Disinfecting apparatus has been sent to the Dominican chapter of the Red Cross by the Haytian chapter at Port au Prince by direction of the national headquarters in Washington. The navy is supplying large quantities of vaccine

GREAT WRITERS WHO COPIED

Both Shakespeare and Moliere Were Free in Their "Adaptations" From Other Authors.

No authors have ultimately attained to a truer originality than Shakespeare and Moliere, an originality both of form and of content. Shakespeare was able to give us at last the final model of modern tragedy, and Moliere succeeded in perfecting the final model of modern comedy.

Moliere's earliest pieces are so closely in accord with the tradition of the Italian comedy of masks that the "Etourdi," for example, might be held up for study as the finest specimen of the species. The Italians supplied him with a ready-made mold into which he could pour whatever he had of his own.

Shakespeare started out also as a humble imitator, not of an exotic form, such as tempted Moliere, but of several specific predecessors in his own language. He was obviously unoriginal in his early pieces, even in "Love's Labor Lost," almost the only play of his the actual source of which has not yet been discovered. In "Love's Labor Lost" he was imitating Lyle; in "Titus Andronicus" he was imitating Kyd; in "Richard III" he was imitating Marlowe.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

How Game of Bridge Got Its Name.

The modern game of auction bridge is a descendant of old Russian whist, and came to its name in a peculiar way about 40 years ago. At that time there lived at Great Daily, Leicestershire, England, two families devoted to the game. They paid each other visits on alternate nights. Their way lay across an old rickety bridge, dangerous to travel after nightfall. So often did one neighbor say to the other in parting: "Thank goodness it is your bridge tomorrow night," that in time they referred to their game only as "bridge." And thus the new name became popular in the countryside, and was later accepted throughout England, and soon followed to America.

Money Easily Earned.

"Well, mum," said the affable tramp, "howdy-do, mum. You don't remember me?"

"No, I don't," said the hard-faced housewife.

"I passed through here about a month ago an' you sicked th' dog on me."

"I remember now."

"Yes, mum. An' as I cleared de fence I met a little man who handed me half a dollar. He said it was worth dat much to find out dat it wasn't safe fer him to go home right den. He's comin down de street now, mum. Would you mind sickin' de dog on me again?"

Accidents Will Happen

By FREDERICK HART

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

When Ethel Dorrance opened her eyes the first thing of which she became conscious was a pair of gray eyes very close to her own, and a handsome face on which anxiety and relief struggled for mastery.

She was vaguely conscious that all her body was one vast ache; that when she tried to move her right arm it refused to obey the behest of her will; and that something—her hat, probably—was twisted around her neck awkwardly and prodding with a sharp wire into her shoulder.

Dimly she remembered what had happened; how she had taken the touring-car and started downtown to meet her father at his office; how she had swerved to avoid running down a street urchin who had sprung from nowhere directly in front of her car; how there had been a clanging of gongs and a grinding of brakes in her car, and a looming vision of the menacing front of a heavy street car over her very head; then darkness and void, till the aching return of consciousness and the knowledge of the eyes near hers and of a strong arm supporting her shoulders.

Weakly she tried to raise herself to a sitting position, but the pain made her sink back again with a groan. A voice belonging to the man who owned the gray eyes spoke.

"Don't move—you're all right—they'll be here in a minute."

Who were they"? she wondered. Then she thought again of the urchin who had been the cause of her accident. "How is—how is the little boy?" she asked.

"He's all right—got off with a bad scare. You saved his life, and risked your own to do it. Ah—here it is."

The Handkerchief Is Marked 'J. H.'

"It" proved to be an ambulance, which drew up with much ringing of bell and chugging of motor. The crowd parted, and a spruce young interne assisted the man with the gray eyes to place Ethel in the car. She made a last effort.

"Tell my father—J. W. Dorrance—tell him I'm all right," she said; and then the cool white walls of the ambulance wavered queerly, and there was a confused buzzing in her ears, and she sank down, down, through limitless space till she reached a place where there was a darkness and silence and blessed relief from pain.

When she came to herself she was lying in her room at home. Beside the bed she made out two faces; one of a white-capped nurse, and the other the anxious countenance of her father. As she opened her eyes she heard him say, "Thank God" and felt him take her hand. She held his fingers in a convulsive grip.

"Am I—am I all right?" she whispered.

"Yes, thanks to the man who picked you up. You gave us an awful fright, little girl, but you're all right now." Her father's voice was cheery and his eyes met those of the nurse with a smile.

"Who was it?" she asked.

"I don't know. He disappeared after the accident. But the doctor at the hospital said that if it had not been for his first aid you might have—" he did not complete the sentence. "See—here's the only clew we have to his identity." He held up a handkerchief. "He twisted this into a tourniquet on your arm and stopped the bleeding where the glass from the windshield had cut you. The handkerchief is marked 'J. H.' That's all we know."

"Perhaps—perhaps he'll come to claim it," she said with a faint smile. Then, for she was still weak, the nurse forbade further talk, and gave her something that tasted bitter, but which sent her into a deep slumber from which she woke refreshed.

Two weeks later, when she could sit up and felt able to receive her friends, many of whom called to congratulate her on her speedy recovery, her father entered the room with a twinkle in his eye.

"Ethel my dear, I have a surprise for you," he said. "Some one is going to call on you in half an hour—some one you don't know yet, but whom you will before long." With these words he was gone, nor could all her coaxing call him back.

Promptly at the set time there was a knock at her door. To her call her father replied, and entered, ushering in a stranger—a stranger with gray eyes.

"Ethel," began her father, "this is the young man to whom we owe your life. May I present Mr. Harris—my daughter, Mr. Harris. I want her to tell you herself how grateful we all are for your prompt aid. And by the way, she has something of yours which you may want." And the good man chuckled to himself as he left the room.

Two hours later Harris took his departure. Ethel called her father to her.

"Daddy, I think he's splendid. How did you find who he was?"

"Well, it was a curious coincidence. Old man Morton, of the big firm of lawyers, wrote in to ask how you were—he's an old friend of mine, you know—and said that this young man, who was a new member of the firm, and a very clever one, had been there and picked you up. It seems that after you left he went to his office to find out who I was, and told the whole story to Morton, swearing him to secrecy. But Morton thought that he was foolish not to let us thank him, so he spilled the beans, and I got hold of young Mr. Harris for lunch and made him promise to come up here. What do you think of him?"

"Daddy, I think he's just as nice as he can be!"

"And did you return his handkerchief?"

A little blush ran across Ethel's face.

"Well, he didn't ask for it, and I thought—I thought I'd like to keep it for a souvenir of the occasion."

"Oh! Well—I see!" And Mr. Dorrance left the room laughing heartily, to the great indignation of his daughter.

But several months later, when the engagement of Ethel Dorrance to the rising young lawyer, John Harris, was announced, and the newspapers hinted at the romantic beginning of their courtship, Ethel made a confession to her father.

"Daddy dear, he did ask for his handkerchief, and I told him that I wanted to keep it to remember him by. And daddy, now I can keep it always—and I'm so happy!"

And her father, remembering how that scrap of linen had stood between his daughter and death, agreed that it was quite proper that it should remain in the family.

Pennsburgh, Pa.—The world's largest egg was produced on the farm of Joseph Guidner of Dillingsville, near here, a sixteen-year-old high school senior, according to information given out by New York poultry authorities, who examined the egg and looked up the records. The measurements of the egg are 6¾ inches and 5⅝ inches respectively. Weight of the egg is six ounces. The record egg was laid by a Rhode Island Red pullet. A second egg of similar size was laid by the same hen.

IN MEMORY OF
CHARLES GORDON CHAMBERS

A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
In the light we see you;
Each night we lay down
We hear thy voice as when on earth
And see each smile and frown.
And when we are called to join you
This world and we are through,
Pray the Lord to us go
As peaceful and brave as you
God knows how we miss you
How empty is thy place;
We miss each loving action
And your sweet, smiling face.
Dear Father, Thou knowest why
You called our darling boy to Thee:
May we follow his example
And meet in eternity.

Father and Mother.

At the Witching Hour

By MARTHA MACWILLIAMS

1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

At the right witching hour magic makes itself of the very simplest things. Witness Keith's undoing. The spell was wrought thus-wise: Items, one white frock, one head of red-gold hair, one pair of slate-blue eyes, deeply set, with black lashes; items various, a child's foot, a berry-stained set of taper fingers matched by adorable lips, likewise stained. And there you are. Keith was three and twenty, a good tall fellow, just now far from happy. He had been struggling up from the depths of a first rejection. Molly Manners has thrown him there—hard. Now he blessed her as a misfit patron saint. Suppose she had not so thrown him, and this fairy goddess had happened?

He had been tramping sturdily all afternoon. Now, with the sun westering sharply, he had begun to think of supper and a bed. Camping was all well with company and preparedness, but sleeping on bare earth and an empty stomach did not appeal to him. Thus evidently his heartache was by way of easing itself normally, even without the magic. Plus the magic, it evaporated like dew in sunshine, leaving in its stead a throbbing anxiety lest this creature of delight vanish before he found courage to approach her.

The berry thicket ran along the edge of the woods, with tall trees flinging their shade athwart it. Up in the trees a pair of bluejays had been playing at hide and seek, chasing each other and making hideous calls. Suddenly the calls grew sharper—the birds with risen crests and vibrant wings darted at the thicket, swooped a second above it, rose a few yards, struck downward again at its very heart, then fluttered away in wild excitement, scolding their loudest. The magician looked at them thoughtfully. "Maybe you see a snake," she said. Then with a half-shriek and a stumble backward, "I see him too—a cotton mouth! Oh 'dear Lord, help me! I don't want to die that way!"

Ashen faced, she yet snatched a stout dead branch, and stood very straight. Keith thought he had never seen anything so fine. Fear was writ large in every lineament—but not a thought of blanching—she would stand her ground. "Where is the snake?" he called husbedly, fearing to startle her further. "Right there—by that tall weed—he was on a vine, has dropped down—and will come after me."

"He will not!" Keith interposed, springing in front of her. Involuntarily she caught his arm, crying: "Look out! You don't know the danger. If he strikes you—you die."

Keith peered in the vine recesses with trained huntsman eyes—there he saw dimly a thickish sinuous body striped copper-bronze, pale yellow and black—the black in narrow lines betwixt the colors. He knew the reptile in books—that it was sluggish, venomous, treacherous. If only he had his revolver—foolishly he had left it behind. He had only his alpenstock and a stout knife—either meant close quarters. He stood measuring the distance for a stroke, noting the while the slow gliding of the reptile toward the girl. As he made to launch a blow at it a bullet from behind clipped the snake's head neatly off, then a set, drawling voice said evenly: "Reckon the next time you go blackberin', Miss Jincy, you won't be so uppity about lettin' me go too."

"Indeed, indeed I won't, Phil," Miss Jincy answered, her color coming back in a flood. "You are certainly the right man in the right place just now. But—you see, I wasn't in such dreadful danger. This gentleman," smiling at Keith, "wouldn't have let him bite me, even if he had had to spoil his nice stick."

"If he had I reckon somebody would a-spoiled him." Phil said truculently. Then changing mood and tone instantly: "Is your name Keith? Thought so. I've got a letter here from Sam Jayson tellin' me to look out you don't get snake-bit nor carried away by varmints. Heaps and heaps of varmints, you [illegible] coar[illegible]ptly at the set time there was [illegible] at her door. To her call her [illegible] replied, and entered, ushering [illegible] stranger—a stranger with gray [illegible]," began her father, "this young man to whom we owe [illegible]e. May I present Mr. Harris [illegible]aughter, Mr. Harris. I want [illegible]ell you herself how grateful [illegible]re for your prompt aid. And [illegible] way, she has something of [illegible]ich you may want." And the [illegible] chuckled to himself as he [illegible]room.

[illegible] him back.

[illegible]ours later Harris took his de[illegible] Ethel called her father to [illegible] look hungry—and Phil is never [illegible] other way this time of the day."

"You said something!" Phil [illegible] back airily. "Keith, I'm glad to [illegible] you. I want to find out how to [illegible] away from girls and have good times all by myself."

"Find another teacher, please," Keith flung back: "I only thought I knew how—the last half hour has shown me better."

"You two don't need to pick a quarrel over me," Miss Jincy said tranquilly. "Sally Ford and Ruthy Davis are coming to stay all night. Billy Davis brings them—you know he never lets his sister go anywhere by herself."

"Especially not to your house," Phil interjected: "Wish I had a sister—nobody's brother would have anything on me."

A big, clean, airy, flower-scented house, a glorious supper, much music and laughter interspersed with games afterward, made Keith's head fairly whirl. He had never thought country life could be like this—the Leavalls and their manager were equal to any he knew in the home suburbs. And the gay company lost nothing by contrast with the jazz-crowds or the set entertainment he was used to. Idly he wondered how people had gained ideas of roughnecks and hayseeds—so unlike the real thing. But speculation did not make him blind to the keen watch Phil kept upon him nor the exceeding discomfort of Billy Davis at sight of him.

Evidently these two were prime rivals of Miss Jincy's favor—each feared the other mightily, but was ready to make common cause with him against an outlander. Miss Jincy herself bore out the impression—she insisted that the whole party should escort Phil and his guest home—at the witching hour when cocks were crowing midnight.

There was pairing, of course—Phil took Jincy as of right. Billy Davis walked perforce with Sally Ford, leaving Keith no choice of company—but Ruthy Davis was so softly merry, he could not complain. At the gate there were long confabulations as to next day, the next, the afternext—but presently came bed and sleep. Keith had not thought it possible to sleep—but after long tramping nature has her way.

He woke to find the sun an hour high, breakfast smoking on the table, and his host sitting outside deep in the country paper, brought in late yesterday. He shouted a gay good morning, and when later they sat eating told droll stories and cracked jokes as though there were no such things as girls and rivalry in the world. But as they sauntered outside, puffing pipes of very good tobacco, he wheeled upon Keith, saying grimly: "You saw me clip that snake's head—how'd you like to swap shots with me?"

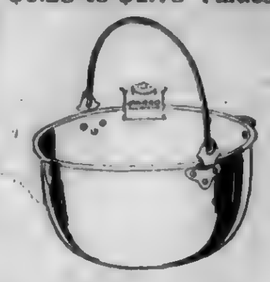
"What for?" Keith demanded, his eyes blazing.

"For keeps—same no names," Phil returned.

Keith, tense all over, said simply: "I am ready, only—I have no weapon. Where can I get one?"

"There," said Phil, nodding toward a table where lay several pistols. Keith snatched up one without looking and stepped out into the sunshine, saying in steely tones: "Now for—word."

"'Bout face. One," Phil cried, raising his pistol. Keith did likewise, gray-faced, but steady.



Phil looked at him, smiling grimly—and fired in the air, saying: "Jincy said last night she loved you best—you may have her. But you shouldn't have lived to do it if you had shown the white feather."

Bermuda Dependent for Its Supply on Moisture Which Is Gathered on House Roofs.

In the early days the Bermuda colonists lived in houses built of cedar. Now they live in houses built of coral rock. It is usually cut on the premises.

There are two things in the islands that determine much of social economy. One is the presence of this building material, which can be sawed out with a handsaw and after some exposure is ready for use, and the other is the total absence of wells.

It is necessary to get all drinking water from the clouds, and that, as a measure of health, requires that every roof from which the water is derived should be kept clean by whitewash.

The palace of the rich man and the hovel of the poor man are equally white, equally substantial-looking and equally clean, and this circumstance furnishes singular superficial evidence of the fairly equal distribution of wealth and comfort in this little community.

Earth-Slip Moved Whole Town 11 Feet

Renton, Wash.—Residents of Cedar Falls, a mountain town forty miles from Puget sound, were terrorized recently when the entire place moved eleven feet toward Cedar Lake. Should the slide continue it will mean the loss of all property and the abandonment of the town site. It has been found that the clay formation upon which the foundations are erected lies in a slanting rock strata of extreme smoothness. There is really nothing but the weight of the city-quhaul to keep it balanced. The winter's deep frost and a supposed earthquake shock may have been cause of the earth-slip. As every section of the town moved exactly the same direction and space the only damage was a few broken window lights.

From Other Authors.

No authors have ultimately attained to a truer originality than Shakespeare and Moliere, an originality both of form and of content. Shakespeare was able to give us at last the final model of modern tragedy, and Moliere succeeded in perfecting the final model of modern comedy.

Moliere's earliest pieces are so closely in accord with the tradition of the Italian comedy of masks that the "Etourdi," for example, might be held up for study as the finest specimen of the species. The Italians supplied him with a ready-made mold into which he could pour whatever he had of his own.

Shakespeare started out also as a humble imitator, not of an exotic form, such as tempted Moliere, but of several specific predecessors in his own language. He was obviously unoriginal in his early pieces, even in "Love's Labor Lost," almost the only play of his the actual source of which has not yet been discovered. In "Love's Labor Lost" he was imitating Lyle; in "Titus Andronicus" he was imitating Kyd; in "Richard III" he was imitating Marlowe.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

TOO MUCH OF RABBIT MEAT

War-Time Food Is Becoming Unpopular in Berlin and Hutches Are Fast Disappearing.

Berlin.—Germans are turning against the use of tame rabbits as food. Rabbit sausage was a staple of the Teuton table in war time and Germans explain its present unpopularity by saying they had too much of it in that "hunger period."

Millions of tame rabbits were imported from Belgium and Holland by the states and the municipalities, and sold at a nominal cost to the citizens, who established rabbit hutches and bred them to replenish the beef and pork supply in the war.

Berlin alone bought 100,000,000 marks (normal value $20,000,000) worth of rabbits in one order, for which the city is still indebted. Whole trainloads were distributed from 1917 to the middle of the following year. Many families tasted no other meat but rabbit for months, and the sweetish flavor of it palled.

The Tailored Green Coat

By CLARISSA MACKIE

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Eleanor saw the broken chain of her shopping bag dangling from the pocket of a smartly tailored green topcoat. Buttoned inside the topcoat was a tall man, who seemed in a hurry.

She did not cry out—that was not the Bradley way. She simply left the crowded car and followed the man in the green coat. He walked rapidly, and the girl was ready to cry with vexation and alarm as she saw her money vanishing. Eleanor's quick, pattering feet stopped short as the man suddenly paused under a lamppost and whirled about. His right hand thrust into his pocket as if in search of a weapon, and then remained there. His other hand awkwardly went up to remove his hat at sight of the girl lingering timidly by.

"You were following me?" he asked, shortly.

"I was pursuing you," she said in an uncertain tone.

"Well?" As he waited for answer to this inquiry, Eleanor had the impression that he was surprised about something else. His rather good-looking young face wore an amazed look.

"I want my handbag, if you please," she said, just as Grandmother Bradley would have done under like circumstances.

"What have I got to do with it?"

"You should be ashamed of yourself!" she cried in sudden indignation. "You know, it is in your coat pocket this very moment."

Then his right hand came out of his pocket and with it came Eleanor's pretty beaded bag with the cut and broken chain dangling. His face was a study in angry astonishment. She saw that his gray eyes flashed like steel as he faced her.

"I don't know who you are, madam," he said slowly, "but from what you say you seem to be the owner of this bag. Have you formed any idea of how it came to be in my pocket?"

"Come Across!"

Eleanor laughed sarcastically. Grandmother Bradley would have done that with just that little dip of the pretty dark head. "The car was crowded," she murmured reminiscently, "and it was easy for anyone—who wanted to—a pickpocket. I mean—to cut the handle of the bag and put it into the side pocket of his big coat. And when the owner discovered the loss of the bag, the car was stopping and she saw a man in a green overcoat alighting, and she saw the handle of her bag hanging from his pocket—that is all."

"That is only the beginning," he laughed shortly, "for I did not know the bag was in my pocket until I heard footsteps behind me and turned to see who it was—putting my hand into my pocket as I did so—and voila! The bag!" He put it in her outstretched hand with a little bow. "I hope you will believe me."

"Thank you," murmured Eleanor, longing to flee and very much afraid to in the presence of this cool young criminal. She wondered what Grandmother Bradley would have done now that the Bradley spirit had led her thus far.

He stood aside so that she could pass on. They were near the corner, and just around the corner was the pretty row of bungalows where her brother lived. If she could only reach there in safety.

He saw her hesitation and spoke in a perfunctory tone: "I am afraid you did not believe my story after all."

"It was a very—a very nice story indeed," she assured him, in a quaking voice, as she hurried away. She did not go far. Before she reached the corner there was the sound of running feet, and she turned with a cry upon her lips.

The man in the green overcoat was still standing under the lamppost, and coming swiftly upon him from the rear was another man, also in an overcoat that looked green under the strong light. There was something in his outstretched hand—something that he pointed at the first man, as he cried hoarsely:

"Give up that bag, see? Where is it? Come across!"

"What bag?" replied the first youth.

"The dinky handbag—it's mine—it wasn't meant for you—no foolin'." The hand that held the weapon lifted and then descended upon the head of the victim.

The indomitable spirit of Grandmother Bradley leaped up again within Eleanor. Then she remembered that there was a police whistle in the pretty bag in her hand, and she stepped back into the shadow of a tree and blew it shrilly.

The man bending over the prostrate form of the man in the green overcoat lifted his head, uttered an oath and dashed across the street and straight into the arms of a policeman, who greeted him cordially as a well-known offender, and carried him away to jail. Eleanor told her story in a shaky tone, but she did not mention the matter of the beaded bag, and the prisoner was haled into court on a charge of assault.

The police whistle had summoned all the residents of Green terrace, and among the foremost was Eleanor's brother, who uttered a sigh of relief.

"We have been worrying about you, Nellie," he said, and then leaving her he went into the crowd gathered about the unknown man. He helped bring him to consciousness, and when he was once more on his feet and smiling grimly and rubbing his fair head, the man in the green overcoat suddenly gripped John Bradley's arm.

"Hello, John Bradley! I was on my way to see you!"

"The dickens you were—is it Roger Lewis? I am glad to see you again. Here, Nellie, this is Captain Lewis. You remember how he saved my life in France? Nellie is my sister—" Dr. John hustled his belated and damaged guest toward home, and Eleanor hovered demurely near by. Her thoughts were chaotic. That heroic friend of John's—and she had insulted him—called him a pickpocket!

In the living room Eleanor told her story, and Captain Lewis grinned foolishly as he described his feelings upon finding the strange bag in his pocket. Later in the evening he murmured to Eleanor, "What do you think of my story, Miss Eleanor?"

Under his mischievous eyes her cheeks grew very pink. "I still think it was a very good story—a true story, after all."

"Some day—but never mind—that is another story," he muttered, and it was another story indeed—the sweetest story ever told—and she believed that, too!

INSECTS FIRST IN THE FIELD

Many of Mankind's So-Called Inventions and Accomplishments Have Been Copied From Them.

One cannot read the work of M. Fabre without being struck by the fact that man in many of his inventions and mechanical accomplishments, has after all been preceded in those accomplishments by insects.

The bee and the wasp used hypodermic needles long before we thought of them, and the bee used formic acid as an antiseptic to preserve its honey from fermentation.

The spider made the first suspension bridge, and certain kinds of that insect have been able to construct their own airships and a workable sort of diving bell. The bee manufactures a wax that we cannot today even imitate, and a worm is still unrivaled in the manufacture of silk thread.

To these skilled artisans might be added the ant, which makes tunnels and subways; the mason bee with its cement work and the great peacock moth which was able to call its kind from a long distance by means of some invisible agency, long before man had dreamed of the possibility of wireless telegraphy.

Monsters of Old.

From a page of "The Life of the Weevil," a newly translated Fabre nature book:

"In the beginning, life fashioned oddities which would be screaming discords in the present harmony of things.

"When it invented the saurian it reveled at first in monsters fifteen to twenty yards long. It placed horns upon their noses and above their eyes, paved their backs with fantastic scales and hollowed their necks into spiny pouches wherein their heads withdrew as into a hood.

"It even tried, though with no great success, to give them wings.

"After these horrors, the procreating ardor calmed down and produced the charming green lizards of our hedges."

A very clear lesson in evolution.

Curious Way of Mining.

The increasing depth to which it is necessary to go in following the vein of kaolin, or potters' clay, mined near the Housatonic river in Connecticut, some time ago caused the introduction of a novel method of mining. Wells from 50 to nearly 200 feet in depth are driven, and two pipes, the outer four inches and the inner two inches in diameter, are introduced. Water at a pressure of forty pounds per square inch is forced down through the smaller pipe, and rises through the larger one, bringing with it about 6 per cent of solid matter, of which 75 per cent is pure kaolin.

WORM GAVE ENGINEER IDEA

Driving Shield Used in Digging Tunnels Modeled on Tactics Employed by Small Borer.

The tunnel-digging driving shield was invented by a great engineer, Marc Isambad Brunel, a Frenchman. The idea came to him as he was watching a sea worm boring a hole for himself in a pile on one of the English docks. The head of this worm is very hard so that he can bite his way through the hardest wood. In watching the worm, M. Brunel noted that the worm not only kicked the accumulated sawdust out behind him, but that he also lined the surface of the hole he was boring with a hard shell coating as he progressed. The operation of the driving shield as used today follows this plan exactly.

Another great help to tunnel building is the use of compressed air. The air forces the water in the ground away from the surface which is being worked, so that the diggers work in dry soil. This invention of Sir Thomas Cochrane in 1830 fills the tunnel with air under a pressure equal to the pressure of the water. The compressed air balances the pressure of the water and holds it back, and if the pressure of the air is made slightly greater the water is driven back from the surface for a short distance and the ground is quite dry.

Are You Like This?

Our good friend James Bowe was telling me the other day the story of the man who lived in a rented house to whom some one gave a dog. Of course the dog had to have a kennel. The man got some old packing boxes and made it himself. He had never built anything before, and making this house for his dog gave him so much pleasure that he bought a small piece of land on the outskirts of the town, and with the help of a local carpenter built a house for himself and family. It is likely that he would be a renter today if some one hadn't given him that dog. Most of us are like the old-fashioned automobiles without self-starters. Some one has to crank us up before we'll run.—Tom Dries in Forbes' Magazine (N. Y.)

The Cost of "Eats."

The people of the United States spend more than $40,000,000 a day for food, or nearly 7 billion and a half dollars a month. Nearly one-third of the money goes for bread, potatoes, fruits, sugar and other "grub" of a vegetable nature. More than two-thirds is spent for meat, fish, eggs, butter, cheese and lard. The average householder hands over to the butcher more than one-fifth of his income. The people of this country consume in a year two and a half billion eggs and nearly ten and a half billion gallons of milk. But a large part of the milk goes to make 1,600,000,000 pounds of butter, 400,000,000 pounds of cheese and 260,000,000 gallons of ice cream.—Indianapolis Star.

Natural History.

"The lady you just met prides herself on having a serpent's tongue."

"How interesting!" exclaimed Miss Cayenne. "I never knew that serpents had such an appetite for tea and chicken salad!"

Didn't Want to Spoil Day.

Jack was being put to bed at the usual time. Being wide awake, he protested until his mother was forced to use forceful terms in order to get him to lie down, whereupon he replied: "Mother you have been so good all day. Don't get cross now."

WAKES JOKE OF DEATH

Radio Operator on Doomed Ship Grim Humorist to Last.

Talks as If He Were Going on Lark in Port Instead of to Bottom of Sea—Not a Soul Saved From Vessel.

New York.—The grim humor of a wireless operator, who laughed at death and flashed bits of wit into the ether as his ship, the Norwegian steamer Orotfoft, with thirty persons on board, wallowed and slowly sank during a mid-Atlantic hurricane, was recorded on the radio log of the Danish steamer Estonia.

Each detail of the ship's plight, each call for aid, was supplemented by the jesting comment of the radio man, whose identity is still unknown.

He talked as if he were going on a lark in port instead of to the bottom of the sea. His last message, a disjointed one, was a series of witticisms—with death as the butt of the joke.

The Estonia, itself hard hit in the 130-mile gale, made a valiant but unsuccessful effort to reach the Orontoft, which first sent out calls for aid when about 700 miles east of Cape Race.

The Estonia at that time was forty-eight miles west of the disabled Norwegian and steaming in an opposite direction. Capt. Hans Jorgenson ordered his ship about and it steamed slowly toward the Orontoft.

Meanwhile Radio Operator Hansen engaged the operator of the Orontoft in conversation. The latter sent out first the following—a stereotyped irony of the seas.

"God pity the poor sailors on a night like this." Then followed a series of "ha, ha."

"And say," he continued, "the old man thinks this calm will be over by nightfall. We sure need some breeze."

An hour later an urgent call for aid was sent out by the Orontoft, and its operator jested again.

"Well, the steward is making sandwiches for the lifeboats. Looks like we were going on a picnic."

Again a half hour later he sent:

"The old wagon has a list like a run-down heel. This is no weather for a fellow to be out in without an umbrella."

"Hold on," returned the Estonia's wireless, "we'll be alongside soon." The Orontoft did not reply until forty minutes later. Then:

"We are sinking stern first. The boats are smashed. Can't hold out any longer."

"The skipper dictated that— He ought to know—where did I put my hat?—sorry we can't wait for you, pressing business elsewhere—

"———."

Six hours after picking up the first call from the Orontoft the Estonia reached its reported position, and though it cruised about for four hours, failed to find even a trace of wreckage.

MAY CUT OUT "OBEY"

Important Changes in Episcopal Marriage Ritual Proposed.

Recognition of the Changed Status of Women May Bring Revision of Vows—May Omit Compulsory Giving in Marriage.

New York.—Recognition of the changed status of women by striking from the Episcopal marriage ceremony the promise to obey, and eliminating the compulsory giving in marriage, was proposed by the commission on revision of the Book of Common Prayer, in a report just made public.

Gaining equal rights with men in their marriage vows, however, the women would lose a special privilege now accorded them. For the proposal to change the ceremony also provides for striking out the bridegroom's pledge, "with all my worldly goods I thee endow."

The commissioner's report will be submitted to the triennial general convention of the church at Portland, Ore., next September. Under the constitution of the church, it cannot be adopted until it has been approved by two general conventions.

Six pages of the report are devoted to the proposed changes in the marriage ceremony, the first hint of the breadth of the revision appearing in the following:

"Make the promise of the man and of the woman identical in form:

"'Wilt thou love him, comfort him, honor, and keep him in sickness and in health; and, forsaking all others, keep thee only unto him, so long as ye both shall live?'"

At present the woman promises to "obey" and "serve."

The next change would make it possible for the clergyman to omit:

"Who giveth this woman to be married to this man?" And would provide for the singing of a hymn or an them at this point.

The report continues:

"Amend the sentence in regard to the ring by omitting the words 'and with all my worldly goods I thee endow.'" This change would make the ring pledge of the bridegroom read:

"With this ring I thee wed: In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

The present final report was expressly ordered published six months in advance of the Portland convention.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST

Dr. G. R. Robbins left the city Monday for Chattanooga, Tenn., for a ten days' vacation, visiting his son Frank and family in their beautiful home on Signal Mountain. Mr. Frank Robbins is manager of one of the largest iron and steel plants in all the South. Dr. Robbins, during the past three months has worked hard with good results, 51 new members having been received. This church has over 80 tithers and the tithing system adopted and followed will solve the financial problems of any church without the sale of tickets for lectures and concerts and selling pies and cakes and other commodities which hinder the cause of Christ and the Church.

In the absence of Pastor Dr. Robbins, Dr. Chambers of Granville will preach at the morning service. Dr. Valentine from Japan will preach at night, illustrating his instructive discourses with stereopticon pictures. Come sure. Fine treat.

"Saint Pat's" Day

By BARBARA KERR

© 1912, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Patricia arrived in just the nick of time. But after it was all over she reflected whimsically: Now maybe that's why Irish questions are never settled, somebody else always puts in an oar.

And this was the way of her oar. She was driving by the car barns, when in a vacant spot she saw a most unusual sight even for Chicago. A gang of young toughs were brutally annoying an old woman. Without thought of consequence to herself, she stopped her car, sprang out, grabbed a boy who was tearing a green ribbon from the old woman's coat by the collar, shaking him till his teeth chattered.

"Go get into my car, quick!" she commanded her. Then she recognized one of the gang as a son of her laundress. "For shame, Mickey Briant! Don't you ever dare to call yourself Irish again!"

"They broke my glasses," said the frightened woman helplessly, "and I can't get along without them."

Mickey to set himself right with the household's patron saint—his mother was for years a maid in Patricia's family—seized his opportunity. "Lemme take 'er, Miss Patricia, I'll be straight wiv 'er."

Patricia nodded. Her eyes blazing wrath, were holding the two bullies, who evidently had staged the fight between the Orangemen and the wearers of the green.

Mickey carefully led the woman to Patricia's car, then stole humbly back to get his share of the lecture: "I could turn you all over to the judge But I'll not if you will give me your word to meet me in a week and tell me some good thing you've done to take the curse off this. Call yourselves Irish, and manhandle a helpless old woman! Mickey, what devil possessed you?"

Patricia knew her audience. She talked so they'd understand. Laying her hand on his shoulder she turned his freckled, penitent face toward her

"For Shame, Mickey Briant!"

while he explained that the gang was "gonna find out who was boss, the Greens or the Orangemen. The old lady saw a Green getting the worst of it, she interfered and the Orangemen tackled her. "They never stopped to notice she was a lydy, St. Pat—I mean Miss Patricia."

She could have laughed at the recital, but knew it would never do, so she said gravely: "You know what atone—pay up—means? In a week you'll meet me at Mickey's house and tell me how you've atoned for this. It's a disgrace you've put on the Irish. You've shamed us—your women—all."

She told his version to the woman as they drove to her home. "I got the portion of the peacemaker," laughed Mrs. Byrne, "but I didn't understand. I wore the green ribbon as a compliment to my neighbor; we're from Ulster. I thought it was a fight and I didn't want the under lad killed."

Patricia patted her hand. "The young villains! It was fortunate that I was down there to see about help. The mother of one of those gamins was our maid for years."

"That's why I was there. Some one told me I might find help, but my son warned me not to go till he could go along."

They drove up to her home and Patricia was helping her up the steps when the door opened and a young man hurried to meet them. "Mother!" he exclaimed, tenderly grasping her shoulders, "are you hurt?"

"Just a bit shaken, Terry lad. I'll go in and put me to rights and you thank the young lady. I couldn't see to do it properly, I'm that crippled without my glasses. They called her Saint Pat, and I reckon she is."

"Was there an accident?" he asked solicitously.

"No, I just rescued her from a brawl," replied Patricia, "and not in a saintly manner, either."

"You're still English, I take," blurted Terry, a flush sweeping his face.

"Take it or leave it," returned she tartly, "but you ought to know the O'Conners were French," and she turned to go.

"Please," he commanded, "that was a piece of bad manners in me when you've been so kind to my mother."

"Never mind, I didn't know she was your mother," Patricia assured him mockingly.

Terry Byrne advanced masterfully and took her arm, saying, "You shall not get away from me till I have explained why I did not dance at your Red Cross ball. Shall we return to my house or may I go with you?"

For the life of her Patricia could not say "neither," as her pride dictated, for when she stole a glance at the young Irish demigod beside her, with his wavy blue-black hair, his blue eyes with their long black lashes, eyes set rather wide apart in a strong fair face—white and clean as a girl's—her blood tingled and her tongue refused her.

"You might have danced. I was never refused before in a 'Lady's Choice.'" She felt it was a childish thing to say.

"I knew it. Forgive me," pleaded Terry, "but I had you wrong, and I was bitter that night over Irish news."

"Ah, I might have known," said Patricia contritely. "What a dear sentimental lot of silly fools we Irish are!"

"Yourself has said it! I'd not believe it from anyone else," he returned tenderly, and his blue eyes held her brown ones and his lips twisted into an adoring smile. Patricia felt the blush burning her cheeks and hastily looked away. He handed her into the car and mechanically took the wheel. Patricia smiled when he realized what he had done.

He gravely laid his hand over hers "It's the way—our way hereafter, and when I've heard all about the little mother's fright I've something to say to you."

Patricia timed her narration and her observations thereon to the time of their arrival at her own home. She was not going to be proposed to in a car, not even a chummy roadster. But when, in her parlor, he said to her: "Now I've made up my mind to this. The Byrne household may have troubles of its own, but they're going to be American troubles, domestic, not international nor altogether Irish."

"How about home rule?" teased Patricia as she sought to elude an outstretched arm.

"Yes," he murmured as he gathered her to him, "if you'll agree to be the Saint Pat of that home, you shall rule it."

And thus it was that on the celebrated 17th of March, Patricia, otherwise Saint Pat, really came into her own.

A SERMON ON LITTLE THINGS

Ecclesiastes 9.10

Our ambition is to do great things; God blesses the little things. The common every-day things.

The 7 Priests blew the LITTLE Ram's Horns, That was all they had. They might have prayed for Gattling gun's. They used what they had. No music, nothing to thrill the followers to acts of heroism.

Moses had nothing but a LITTLE Rod. He might have refused to try because he had no dynamite. Yet he dug a well in a rock, and the thousands of thirsty people drank and lived. He used what he had. God and a gust of wind, can fell a forest or devastate a city.

Samson slew a thousand Philistines with the LITTLE dried up Jawbone of an Ass. 3000 men of Judah took him bound unto the Philistines, and God gave him a LITTLE old dry bone and he cleaned out the camp. He might have refused, because he had no sword; God back of your poor weak effort can drive the enemy to his den.

The Widow of Zarepath, had a handful of meal; and a LITTLE oil in the cruse. Then she and her son must starve or go to the poorhouse, but Elijah and Tishbite came along and asked her to bake some corn cakes for him. she made them so good, he decided to remain and board with her for a while. And they had corn cakes for breakfast every morning for a year.

A LITTLE Boy with five LITTLE loaves and two LITTLE fishes; helped Jesus to feed five thousand hungry men; and they gathered up twelve bushels of fragments. The Deciples said what will we do, it will take two hundred penny worth of bread; but when they obeyed Jesus they found there was enough for every one and plenty left. God looks after the corn and potatoes while you are asleep. He keeps them growing. He knows about yours EATS.

Paul and Silas were going to prayer meeting. they were both broke, But when the blind beggar asked them for help, they gave him that which money could not buy. They gave him a LITTLE lift and told him in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth to rise up and walk. And he almost broke up the meeting with an old time shout. Exchange.

The Annual Mite Box Opening of the Glenwood Home Missionary Society will be held at the church, Thursday evening, April 20th, at 7:30. Rev. Stimmel will conduct the devotional service and Miss Leavitt, Deaconess, who helped organize this auxiliary, will be our guest and will give us a talk on "Immigration." All the ladies and their husbands are cordially invited to be present.

Goods of Former Days.

Perhaps we are too conservative in regard to our foods now-a-days, but reading of dishes of long ago we find them fearsome mixtures. Everything with anything in every possible way was apparently the motto of the cook of ancient times. Meats and fruits, fish and sugars, jam and oil, all were thrown together in what seemed to be a haphazard fashion, which resulted in hundreds of fantastic recipes. Vitamines, calories and proteins did not worry the ancient cook.

The Roman epicure rejoiced in meat that had ripened to decay. A valued combination in old England was the "innards" of fish, cut into small pieces, mixed with wine, and pounded; the resultant sauce being used to boil with the fish itself.

Had Their Number.

Jim—Let's walk over and talk to those girls.

Slim—It's no use; they are telephone girls.

Jim—What of it?

Slim—They won't answer you.

That Was Too Much.

Thomas Fiddle was a very learned young man. At school he shone like all the stars and planets lumped together. A sixty-candle-power lamp wasn't in it beside the burning flame of his genius.

But his friends were frightfully disappointed when he refused to accept the degree of doctor of divinity.

One of them tackled him on the subject.

"Ah, well," replied the genius, "it's bad enough to be named Fiddle without being Fiddle, D. D."

A man going through a pottery factory one day said to a workman who was turning a vessel on the wheel, "Isn't there a machine made for doing that sort of work so that one would not have to shape it laboriously with the hand as you are doing?" To which the worker replied, "Yes, they've made machines to do it, but they are not a success. Somehow this kind of work needs the human touch." That is just the case exactly with men. They need the human touch.

CHRISTIAN HOMES

Everything that is good in the church or in society is first planted, shielded, matured in good homes. A thoroughly Christian home implies a great deal. The spirit of Christianity aim at the totality of our being, mind and heart, as well as conscience There are many sides to our nature and all need to be cultivated. The science of life is the greatest of the sciences. The art of life is the chief of all the arts. And it should be nonsense to suppose that all this could come about by any sort of blind and idle chance.

A home that is really good, that is radically and thoroughly Christian is a center of eager, incessant, manifold activities. It is full of animation. It is alive to itself and keenly sensitive to its surroundings. Everything that is human is of interest to it. Each true Christian home seems to itself to be the very center of the world, from which its lines of intelligent sympathy reach out everywhere. The home—no more than the individual—does not exist for itself. If it tries to, it will miserably fail. Every good family is conscious of being a part of the whole family of which God is the Father, and its members are eager to keep in communication with the deepest longings, the worthiest actions, the noblest thoughts, the finest utterances, of others everywhere, past and present, and so striking into the swim and mid-current of all the best and mightiest life of the world.

It Christian missions have any meaning, it is in the creation and multiplication of good homes. Good homes are the hope of the world.—Advance.

A grocery keeper over in West Virginia, whose son had gotten into trouble, sought the help and information of a medium, and was informed the spirits could not be induced to help without money; and the medium suggested that $2,000 be brought to see what effect that might have on the spirits; this proved of no avail, and $2,000 more was brough, but still the spirits refused to work; when the sum of $8,000 was presented, this amount seemed to charm the spirits, and the money was placed in a small green bag and held over the grocer's head, while the spirits were supposed to give the information.

The seance was successful, the spirits were very talkative, and the gullible grocer was instructed to go and deposit the money in a bank; when he arrived at the bank and looked in the little green bag, the "green grocer" the $8,000 was gone, and also the medium. Moral, "A fool and his money soon are parted."

THE BEAUTY OF KINDNESS

The world does not know how much it owes to the common kindnesses which so abound everywhere. There had been a death in a happy home, and one evening soon after the funeral the family were talking with a friend about the wonderful manifestation of sympathy which their sorrow had called out. The father said he had never dreamed there were so much love in people's hearts as had been shown to his family by friends and neighbors. The kindness had come from all classes of people, from many from whom it was altogether unexpected, even from entire strangers.

Neighbors with whom his family had never exchanged calls had sent some token of sympathy. "It makes me ashamed of myself," said the good man, "that I have so undervalued the good will of those about me. I am ashamed also that I have so failed myself in showing sympathy and kindness to others about me in their sorrow and sufferings."

The Silver of Romance

By LAURA MONTGOMERY

© 1913, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Rose had been turning the question over in her mind so intensely that she was not surprised when Harold turned to her and said:

"Money makes all the trouble in life; if it weren't for money and influence, people could do as their hearts dictate."

It was almost like answering her unspoken thought. Rose loved the slight, dark young man sitting opposite her. He was a clerk making a moderate salary; he was not a man who would ever do great things and he wasn't especially handsome: just a normal, clean young fellow who would make a good husband. "Money is a terrible problem," she answered earnestly.

Harold looked slightly surprised. He had not guessed that she would take the situation that way. "Without influence it is almost impossible to get ahead, at least for a man in my position; but there are so many things to be considered—the question of loyalty to one's ideals—" he broke off flushing and the girl turned the conversation cleverly to safer channels. She, too, was undecided.

At the door that night Harold lingered. The moonlight sent a cool whiteness down upon the old-fashioned brownstone steps and turned Rose's dark hair silver. "You look wonderful in that silver light," cried the guest, but Rose only laughed and stepped back. She knew that he loved her, but her mind was on the heights. She longed for the things that could be bought with gold. The fairy moonlight was romantic, but the frail silver of romance would not pass muster in daylight. Only gleaming gold could buy what she wanted.

Harold felt the change in her mental attitude and involuntarily stiffened. After all, a man could offer no more than his all. At least that was the way Rose read his changed face. It was as though a chill wind had passed between them. The moment of lovers had passed.

"Would You Like to Go for a Spin?"

When the shabby door of the boarding house had closed between them Rose went slowly upstairs. The savor had vanished from life. The wealthy old widower who occupied the parlor suite saw her pass. "Would you like to go for a spin in the moonlight?" he asked, guessing that some shadow had fallen between the couple who were almost lovers. "No?" he said sharply as the girl shook her head. "I suppose Harold's mercenary ideas have disgusted you with men. I heard today that Miller has hinted to him that he will take him into the firm if he marries the right girl—meaning, of course, Edna Miller, the plain daughter of a wealthy family."

Stunned, Rose stood, one small foot poised upon the next step. Harold and Edna Miller! How had she been so blind? This accounted for Harold's preoccupation. He had been actually hesitating between the girl he loved and the girl who would bring him all he desired from the world.

"Youth is always selfish," pursued the gray-haired man, his square stub born face looking wrinkled and sallow, his cool aged eyes upon the youthful face before him. "One can scarcely blame Harold for looking out for himself. After a man has been married a year riches are mighty nice to have. Of course I think him mighty silly to pass up a girl like you for a plain little girl like Edna, but—"

"I am very sleepy," burst out Rose furiously, a glint of tears in her stormy blue eyes, "I—"

The other laughed; "You can scarcely be sleepy at 7:30 o'clock," he teased; "I will get out the car and we can race with the moonbeams. The clouds are being whipped along by the wind, and we shall have rain before long."

Rose made no pretense of listening further. Her mind was filled with Harold; Harold whom she had fancied bound to her by iron links; Harold whom she could choose or— Angrily she stamped her foot upon the worn stair carpet. She had been toying prettily with Harold while he had been trying to decide whether or not he could give up all for love. She had never looked at marriage from the man's point of view. Marriage to Harold meant the dividing of a salary that was not more than adequate for one. It meant the giving up of his liberty. Instead of giving up a position as stenographer for the pleasant duties of a home life, as Rose would do, it meant that he must work harder, must provide for her future; instead of having only the responsibility of getting a month's room rent ahead, that he must spend so shrewdly that they would save for the home they would ultimately need.

"And I thought the choice lay with me," stormed Rose, when she had reached the haven of her room—"thought that I would be very noble to give up the ideas of pretty frocks and a car of my own to marry a clerk and start out in a three-room flat. As if I'd think of marrying for money. I—" Weeping bitterly she flung herself upon her bed. "I see now that all I want is a tiny home and—Harold."

Below in the parlor suite her elderly admirer waited patiently. If Rose, as he expected, came running downstairs again, he would take her out in his handsome car and propose. He was getting old and he needed a fresh young arm to lean upon. He hated to pay for service. As his wife she must give it freely.

But while he dreamed, half asleep, Rose, stifled by the intense heat, crept downstairs and went to the tiny park opposite where she sat down on a bench and tried to cool her hot cheeks.

"Rose," the low voice sent a magical wave of joy into the girlish heart that had so foolishly risked its chance at happiness, "I saw you come out. I was selfish enough to hesitate because I know that I shall never be a rich man without some outside aid, but, Rose, money cannot buy the most important thing in life. I love you, dear, and I believe that we can find our happiness between our own walls. If you will help me we can get a tiny cottage somewhere where we can breathe. I earn only $30 a week. Do you think we can spread that over? Can you cook and mend and do the many things that a poor man's wife must do?"

And Rose, grasping eagerly at the hope that she had so nearly lost, felt that the silver of romance was far more desirable than the glittering gold of the world. "Yes," she cried, ardently; "of course I can, Harold. Why didn't you settle it all sooner?"

HAS TWENTY YEARS OF LIFE

Coffee Tree Can Be Relied Upon to Bear Only for About That Length of Time.

Coffee generally is spoken of as a berry or bean, but that part of the coffee tree that we use is really the seed. The trees grow naturally to a height of from twenty to thirty feet, but this natural growth is checked by the growers, who keep the trees as low as five feet. The cutting does not injure the tree and it is far more convenient to gather the fruit.

The coffee tree begins to bear when it is about three years old, and it continues for about twenty years, the singular fact about it being often noticeable that the fresh blossom and the ripened fruit will appear on the same tree at the same time.

The fruit of the coffee tree is round and red and looks like our cherries, and, being sweet to the taste, is eaten by the natives as we eat cherries. Each berry contains two seeds—the beans with which we are familiar—inclosed in a skin, with their flat sides together. The meat of the fruit is valueless, so when the fruit is gathered it is dried so the seeds may be easily removed.

How coffee came first to be used as a drink is not known, but it has been so used for at least a thousand years in Persia. It was introduced in Europe about three hundred years ago.

Blue for Connubial Bliss.

There are people who believe that we are very much affected by color, and in this connection Mr. Leon Hutzman, Pittsburgh psychologist, issues a warning to wives: Suppose, as has been known to happen, the wife quarrels with her husband over the breakfast table, and he goes off to his office in a huff. She must be very careful as to the color of her dress when he next sees her on his return. If she greets him in brilliant red or hard purple, he will scowl, and the quarrel will be renewed. His tendency to "forgive and forget" will vanish. But let the wife greet him in a dress of soft, warm blue, and a happy evening is ensured. And it will be particularly happy if the dress has a bit of gold trimming. One point Mr. Hutzman omits to mention. Do not let the dress be a very expensive one. Otherwise memories of the bill may come into hubby's mind, and all prospects of harmony will end.

The best place in Columbus to buy a Spring Coat, Suit or Dress is at Seiller's. Our slogan—Style and Quality at a price.

WIRELESS LIGHT IS NEW WONDER

Only in Experimental Stage, but Scientists Have Faith in Its Possibilities.

SOFT ORANGE-COLORED GLOW

Research Work at Massachusetts Institute of Technology Has Succeeded in Producing Light Without Wires.

Boston.—A ring of soft orange light, with no wires leading to it and glowing in the darkness, sets up an interesting train of speculation as to the illumination of the future. Nobody supposes for an instant that our lighting problems have been solved. Compared with what the future will bring forth the present arrangement of wires with bulbs that have to be screwed into their sockets and renewed frequently is cumbersome and inefficient. Research work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has succeeded in producing a light without wires; that is to say, the incandescence is set up by induction, where the electric current bridges an interval purely by electric energy. To be sure the light is only an experiment and so far is not practical for commercial purposes, but the method has possibilities.

The Test.

The research division of the department of electrical engineering experiments with a tube filled with neon gas have been carried to the point where the tube has been caused to give out light, although no wires have been attached to it. In the ordinary form of electric illumination the light is usually produced by an incandescent form of filament or by carbon electrodes. The life of both of these types is limited by the burning out of the incandescent element. Of course, in the case of the arc lamp this can be easily renewed, but at the cost of frequent trimming. The type of incandescent bulb in common use has been improved through the substitution of tungsten for the carbon filament. Several types of lamp using incandescent vapor have been developed, and have been used both experimentally and commercially. The Moore light used very long tubes filled with carbon dioxide or nitrogen, which were caused to glow through the discharge of a high voltage electric current through the glass. This type was not much used commercially, but a similar lamp known as the Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor lamp is at present in general use in a great variety of places, among them the motion-picture studios. Both of these types require electrodes, or terminals, sealed in the glass, but they have a long life because there are no parts which wear out or burn out.

The Instrument.

The experiments conducted at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology used a glass tube closed upon itself in the form of a ring. This ring was slipped over an iron core wound with the proper number of turns of wire through which alternating current was caused to flow. The magnetism, passing through the glass tube, then induced a voltage in the gas contained therein, and if the parts were properly proportioned this voltage ionized the vapor and caused it to glow, giving out light in a similar manner to the Moore and the Cooper-Hewitt lamps, but of a pleasing orange color. Neon gas at a low pressure was used, since it has desirable characteristics for this purpose, and a high-frequency current of about 300,000 cycles was employed to excite the transformer.

The new lamp is only in the experimental stage at present and the amount of light given out is not large, but the possibilities are interesting. It could be commercially made in the form of a standard fixture around which the glass tubes could be slipped. The lamp will last indefinitely unless the glass is broken, and then it is only necessary to slip a new tube in place, no electrical connections being required. The quality of the light is soft and pleasing, and as it is not of a high intensity it does not strain the eyes.

400 PARTIES IN MEXICO RACE

Midsummer Congressional Elections Stir Politicians in Neighboring Republic.

Mexico City.—A midsummer election of members of the national congress is to be held in Mexico and the numerous parties are commencing to name their candidates and adopt their platforms. It said that there are at least four hundred organized parties in Mexico, although less than half a dozen of these can be considered factors in the election. The efforts of the dominant parties are now being directed to corralling the votes of these small and comparatively insignificant groups.

Profits in Rabbits.

Montrose, S. D.—While farmers in some parts of the state are endeavoring to kill off rabbits as pests, to be destroyed by any means available, Kenneth Platt of this city is raising and selling them to hotels and restaurants as a business. During the past few months he has sold more than $300 worth of rabbit carcasses besides taking a number of money prizes at fairs as well as ribbons and cups.

PARCEL POST USES INCREASE

Shipments of Fruit and Vegetables Are Steadily Growing, Says Post Office Official.

Washington.—Shipments of fruits and vegetables in great quantities by retail and wholesale merchants to all sections of the United States is steadily increasing, according to reports made to General Superintendent W. H. Riddell of the railway mail service.

As an illustration of the use to which the parcel post is being put by merchants, it was asserted by Superintendent Riddell that recently an entire freight car was loaded with individual cases of asparagus and shipped by parcel post rates. Each parcel, however, conformed to weight regulations, and it would not have been possible to ship the carload as a bulk, it was explained.

Department officials said that there appeared to be no reason why sufficient numbers of crates to make up a half car or a carload, cannot be shipped in the future as parcel post.

ROYAL ROMANCE STARTS FAD

London.—In the wake of the marriage of Princess Mary to Viscount Lascelles, country-wide craze has developed for naming children and things in honor of the occasion and its principals.

From different parts of the country come reports of such names as "Royal Wedding Hill," and "Princess Mary Shaw." Innumerable Harrys, Marys, Mary Alexandras and so on figure in registrations of the last few days.

Painters and sign writers testify to a mild boom in their art owing to the many changes in signs and names of shops, bungalows, houseboats, houses, etc., in order to give them a "typical" touch.

Inns in all parts of the country are being named "The Princess Mary," or "The Lord Lascelles."

DOOM BLUE GRASS BURGLARS

Kentucky Assembly Passes Law Putting Them in the Same Class With Murderers.

Frankfort, Ky.—Burglars and murderers are placed in the same class in a law passed by the Kentucky general assembly in the closing days of the 1922 session, the penalty for breaking into a dwelling house at night being fixed at life imprisonment or death, at the discretion of the jury.

The assembly also passed a law which provides that embezzlers from banks, bank robbers, willful murderers, firebugs, highway robbers and persons convicted of crimes against women cannot be paroled.

Grade School Classes Taught by Persons Who Have Not Even High School Diplomas—Trained Teachers Barred.

Washington, D. C.—Commissioner John J. Tigert of the bureau of education and his assistants are studying the question of how to raise the standard of training for school teachers throughout the United States. Thousands of women and men entrusted with the education of large groups of children in the public schools lack what the federal officials regard as an adequate preparation for their work, Doctor Tigert said.

In the grade schools many persons are teaching classes who have not even high school diplomas, according to a recent investigation by the bureau of education. According to the federal standards a man or woman to be properly equipped for teaching should have at least a normal school education. If the teaching is to be that in high schools a college or university diploma should represent adequate training. In other words the training of the teacher should reach considerably beyond the subject to be taught.

Many Are Barred.

Thousands of men and women who were adequatey trained to teach are now barred from the schools, it has been found. This is a result of the war. When living costs increased faster than teachers' salaries large numbers of teachers who were well equipped for their work were compelled to step out of the schools into the other other positions that would pay better. Many were practically forced out by lack of means to remain, although their first interest was with the schools.

There was a national shortage of teachers. Economic depressions followed. Persons with hardly any training stepped into the vacant positions. At the same time the level of salaries paid teachers began to be increased. More and more inadequately trained persons went into the schools as teachers. The shortage of teachers ceased to be a problem. There are now enough, so that few schools need remain closed for lack of men and women to conduct them.

Standard Lowered.

But the teachers who are inadequately trained are holding the positions. And many persons who studied to make teaching their life work are without positions. School boards generally feel that in all fairness those persons who accepted positions when there was a teacher shortage should be retained.

The standard of training for teachers thus has been very largely lowered throughout the schools in all sections of the United States, the reports show. The correction of this situation may take several years, according to Commissioner Tigert.

NOTICE

In the past we have been taking want ads, etc., for publication in the Record over the telephone, doing so as a matter of accommodation for the convenience of Hilltop residence, depending upon their promises to "come in and pay" or pay collector when same calls. After several years trying different ways of this method we have been playing a decidedly losing game. Some have kept their promise and called and paid, or paid collector; but a very great majority have failed to do so. For one to go probably several squares to collect 12 or 15 or 24 cents and succed in about one out of three times, or possibly never get it, after calling maybe at one place 3 or 4 times, or have party tell them they would call at the office—and then "forget" it again—has made "Want Ad" printing in the Record anything but profitable. Trying a new stunt last week, we asked those who called to please come in and pay that week, or send postage stamps. Nearly 50 promised to do so. To this writing there have been 7 kept that promise. Therefore we have decided to ask persons wishing to insert a Want Ad, or other paid notice, to kindly bring or send same to the Record office with cash to pay for it, not later than 11:30 Wednesday noon, or take it to one of our authorized ad agents not later than 9:30 Wednesday morning. The following stores will take either want ads or local news items:

Edwards Bros. Confectionery—2759 W. Broad, Cor. Broad and Hague.

Conrad Schirtzinger Confectionery—2700 Sullivant Ave., Cor. Warren Ave.

Hilltop Pharmacy—2335 Sullivant Ave. Cor. Sullivant and Clarendon.

B. J. Moorman—2109 W. Broad, Cor. Whitethorne.

We are hoping to have other convenient stations for this purpose in the near future.

All Want Ads are 6 cents a line, 12c minumum charge, and are to be paid for when taking copy to these places. Any news items or announcement is free. But we ask person sending said item to please sign your name to same that we may know from whence its authority. We will hold the name confidential and not publish it.

As it is our aim to run a thoroughly clean and reliable paper, we reserve the right to abstain from printing any article sent in or to cut out portions of same if thought best to do so.

WILL PRESERVE HISTORIC FORT

Daughters of American Revolution Plan Reconstruction of Famous Fort Crawford.

ORIGINAL WAS BUILT IN 1812

Most Famous of Any of the Forts in the Northwest Has Fascinating History—Zachary Taylor Once Commandant.

Prairie du Chien, Wis.—Preservation and eventual reconstruction of historic Fort Crawford is forecast by the action of the Prairie du Chien chapter of the D. A. R. in securing an option on the property from W. R. Graves, its owner, in an effort to preserve it for historical purposes.

Fort Crawford was the most famous of any of the forts in the Northwest. The original post, Fort Shelby, was built during the war of 1812. Hardly had the first American troops taken possession of it, when a detachment of British troops, re-enforced by Indians, came down the Wisconsin river and laid siege to it. The garrison was forced to surrender and for a year the Union Jack floated over the frontier post and southwestern Wisconsin was a part of the British empire.

Buildings Ruined by Fire.

At the close of the War of 1812 the fort was evacuated and shortly afterward most of the buildings were gutted by fire.

The American government then rebuilt the fort on the same site, calling it Fort Crawford. Later a new site was chosen a mile south on higher ground and a larger Fort Crawford was erected.

Zachary Taylor, later President of the United States, was commandant of it at one time. One of his lieutenants was Jefferson Davis, who led the southern Confederacy through the Civil war. Davis fell in love with Taylor's daughter and married her, to the great displeasure of the commandant.

The fort surgeon was Doctor Beaumont, whose assistant, Martin St. Alexis, had a bullet hole in his stomach. Through this hole Doctor Beaumont studied the processes of digestion. The experiments thus conducted still form the major part of the knowledge medical science has of the stomach and its functions. St. Alexis is mentioned in many school physiologies.

Other Notables at Fort.

Others stationed at the fort at various times were the historian, Henry Schoolcraft; the artist, George Calvin; and Gen. William Clark, Lewis Cass and Winfield Scott.

The treaties of 1826 and 1830, wherein the Indians deeded away the last of their lands east of the Mississippi river, were signed at Fort Crawford. The Black Hawk war centered about it, and Abraham Lincoln, then a young lieutenant was stationed at the fort during this conflict. Chief Blackhawk was taken to the post as a prisoner after his capture by the Winnebago chiefs after the rout of the Sacs and Foxes at the Battle of Bad Axe.

Near the site of the fort is Fort Crawford cemetery, where those who died during their term of service were buried. The cemetery is government owned and well cared for.

7 MONTHS' GAIN, $15,000,000

Col. Humphreys Began in Mexia Oil District With "Shoestring"—Now Millionaire.

Mexia, Tex.—In a period of seven months the wealth of Col. E. A. Humphreys has increased from a few dollars to more than $15,000,000.

He began operating in the Mexia field when this was wildcat territory and he had no more than a "shoestring" to go on. The other day he incorporated into one company all of his holdings. This new corporation has a capital of $15,000,000, of which Colonel Humphreys owns 76⅔ per cent. The remaining 23⅓ per cent is held by the Pure Oil company interests.

Besides the oil holdings which Colonel Humphreys turned into the new company he has many other large private investments, it is stated. The two other companies, the Humphreys-Mexia Oil company and the Humphreys-Texas Oil company, which were merged into the Humphreys Oil company, will be dissolved, it is stated. The extent of the proposed operations of the new company is not as yet publicly known.

THIS BEAR IS BULLET-PROOF

Three Slugs From Rifle Fail to Stay Onrush of Bruin in Pennsylvania Wilds.

Lewisburg, Pa.—Samuel Crone, a Shamokin butcher, encountered a bear that weighed about 400 pounds, dropped the animal with a bullet from his rifle, but was startled to see the bear rise and, howling with pain, race toward him on all-fours.

Two more shots were fired and struck the tough hide of the animal, inflicting painful wounds, but each time the bear refused to stay down, and by the time it was ten feet in front of Crone the latter's weapon jammed.

Desperate, the hunter decided to battle with the stock of his rifle as a club and stood his ground as the animal rose on its hind legs as if to rush him. Suddenly the bear changed its mind, turned and ran limping into the woods.

Wire Relic to Be Preserved.

Portland, Ind.—An oddity is on display in the office of Henry Martin, Jay county auditor. It is a piece of the first barbed wire ever made in this country and was brought to the auditor by L. P. Fennig of New Corydon, northeast of this city. The wire is in links of a length of three or four inches instead of being one twisted piece as the wire is now made. The antique piece of wire will be placed in the museum of the courthouse.

Pig With Elephant Head

Irvington, Ky. — Forrest Stith brought in a pig from a litter of eight that had an elephant head and snout and only one eye, which was in the center of its head; it had no hair. The mother came from the state fair at Louisville.

HOLD TO OLD GLORIES

Manchus Retain Ancient Ceremonies of Former Dynasty.

Emperor, Though Virtual Prisoner in Forbidden City, Receives Homage of Attendants According to Ancient Forms.

Pekin.—In spite of the fact that Ching dynasty has been out of power since 1911 and the present emperor of China is a virtual prisoner in the forbidden city of Pekin, all ceremonies connected with the Manchu emperors are still kept up.

At the recent Chinese New Year's celebration the customary honor was paid to the spirits of the emperors in their resting places at the Eastern Tombs. Offerings of food and provisions were placed before the tombs and the old Manchu officials who are still retained in office by the Ching dynasty kowtowed according to the custom prescribed in Manchu house law for the imperial family.

These officials are experiencing considerable difficulty in following out all the old customs because of the lack of funds available for the upkeep of the emperors' tombs. The funds promised to the imperial family by the republican government are usually very tardily paid, with the result that poverty is facing the one-time affluent Manchus.

At the eastern tombs many of the Manchus, deprived of the annual stipend formerly paid by the imperial government, have been forced to become gatherers of wood and charcoal in order to support themselves.

The old towns and villages are falling into ruins, the forests of the huge tract devoted to the burial of the emperors are fast becoming devastated and the monumental tombs are beginning to fall into ruin and decay.

Every effort is being made by the officials of the tombs, however, to maintain the glory of the dead emperors, and the ceremonies at New Year's typified the attitude of these faithful adherents of a departed order who refuse to allow the glory of the Ching dynasty and the Manchu rule to be dimmed.

HUNTS INDIAN RELICS

Dr. J. A. Mason of Chicago is one of a number of scientists connected with the Field museum of Chicago, who will visit different sections of the world in search of material for the Field museum. Doctor Mason has gone to South America to open up a number of Indian graves in the hope of securing trinkets and relics of the old Indian tribes in South America.

CLOSE U. S. HUNGARY RELIEF

Warm Letter of Thanks Sent by Cable to Secretary Hoover by President of Committee.

London.—Owing to the steadily improving food conditions in Hungary, the American relief administration has closed its offices. Stocks sufficient to carry the relief work up to next June have been left for distribution by the local committee, whose president, Prof. James Bokay, has sent the following cable to Herbert Hoover, chairman of the American relief administration:

"Permit me to convey on behalf of this suffering nation its undying gratitude for the noble humanitarian work which America under your esteemed leadership has extended to us in our hour of need. May you be given strength for continuation of your great world leadership."

Since August, 1921, when the American relief administration started operating in Hungary, 42,000,000 meals have been served and the total value of food and clothing distributed amounts to $1,205,620.

Lorelei, the Diving Queen

By R. RAY BAKER

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Straight up from the narrow stream rose the rocky banks; and on a projecting rock sat Lorelei combing her hair. Yes, it was golden hair, while the comb—well, it was just a common comb.

And Lorelei was singing, just as her fabled namesake, the siren, was wont to sing. But this song was not intended to lure boatmen to their doom on the jagged rocks below. It simply meant that Lorelei was happy and care free. There was something enticing about the golden hair, but, she couldn't help that. It was wet, for she had been swimming, and she was combing it in the sun to dry it.

This Lorelei had no thought of luring any man to his doom. She did not care especially for men, and she cared for no specific man. If she was a siren, she was not to blame.

However, there was a boatman, and he was lured to his doom—if falling in love may be referred to that way. He was paddling a canoe dexterously down the swift little river, skillfully avoiding the rocks that lined the narrow channel. The current was so swift it was almost a rapids until it reached a point right under Lorelei's perch, where it became peaceful in a wide, circular pool. It was deep there as well as peaceful, because the rounded banks, with only a small outlet, served as an effective dam.

The boatman should have kept his eyes on the channel and he would have avoided mishap. True, he would have missed—but that comes later. Naturally he heard the song and his eyes strayed upward. Glinting sunlight, reflected from the golden hair, hypnotized him and the canoe shot out of its path and struck a rock which pierced the bottom of the craft, while at the same time overturning it. The boatman was pitched into the rushing water, which carried him along to the deep pool. A cry escaped his throat as he sank beneath the surface, his hands protruding for an instant after the head vanished. In a moment he bobbed up again, seemed to strangle, but managed to get out a short yelp of despair. Then down he went once more.

The Girl Leaped.

This time Lorelei went after him. Discarding her comb, unfurling her almost-dry hair to the wind, she stood erect, poised for an instant on the ledge, with her supple body bent forward, outstretched hands close together, and achieved a graceful dive that made the pool open in the center to receive her. It was at least 100 feet from the ledge to the pool, but Lorelei hesitated not the fraction of a second when she appraised the situation. She had not seen the boatman approaching, so noiselessly had he piloted his craft and so busy was she in combing her hair and laughing at the sky. And that first cry he uttered served as the first intimation that something was occurring below that required her attention.

Even as the girl leaped to save the man's life she made a scornful remark to herself about an idiot who couldn't swim venturing such a dangerous passage in a frail canoe. It should be mentioned here that Lorelei was garbed in a bathing costume which had not yet dried after her afternoon dip. It was left out of the introduction advisedly, in order not to weaken the comparison with the fabled maiden of the same name.

Down into the cold depths the girl disappeared and one hand fastened itself firmly on the hair of the submerged boatman. Quickly she rose to the surface with the burden, and with deft, rapid strokes she turned him to the wall of the stream. A narrow ledge a few inches above the water was her objective, and presently she hauled the boatman up on this place of safety. He lay still for a short while, then opened his eyes and looked up at her. He appeared in a sort of daze at first, but gradually a smile broke over his genial face, and then he laughed.

"Thunk," he said simply. "A close call, I should say."

The girl's lips curled in scorn.

"Serves you right," she said, heartlessly. "What business has a man who can't swim trying to paddle a canoe down this current, no matter how efficient he may be with a paddle?"

"None at all," he agreed. "I deserve it, I guess."

He scrambled to his feet, taking care not to slide from the ledge, and she led him along a path which gradually widened. A break in the wall appeared, with a natural flight of crude steps, and up these they went to a gradual curving that came out on the ledge above. Here the girl recovered her comb and resumed the drying of her hair, or, rather, she began all over, while the man found her a seat on a rock and basked in the sun.

No word was spoken for a while, but presently the rescued said to the rescuer:

"Would it be considered out of place to inquire whether you live in this vicinity? You don't by any chance happen to be a nymph that has this ledge for a home?"

She laughed merrily, having recovered her good nature.

"No, I'm not a nymph, but at present I am making my home near here."

"Rather dangerous, I should think," he observed. "I have understood that smugglers operate along this stream. In fact, that ledge below, with the stairs and the incline, would make an ideal place. This river, I have been told—I have been too lazy to look it up on the map—is the boundary between the United States and Canada."

"That is Canada on the other side," she informed him. "In fact, it was a Canadian rock that wrecked your canoe. Are you interested in smuggling?"

"Slightly," he retorted, while he bent over and kicked a loose stone into the pool below.

While they dried in the sun they conversed, and before he left she had begun to like him. She offered to take him home—wherever that might be—in her car, but he said he would get back all right.

Three days later, at the same time of day, while she combed her hair on the ledge, he came in a new canoe, but this time there was no mishap. The visits were repeated, until they became custom, and she grew more than fond of him. There was a quiet, indefinable attraction about the man. One day, to test him, she asked:

"Would it be out of place to ask if you are a revenue officer?"

He turned away with an evasive reply:

"I might be."

It confirmed her suspicions and she went further.

"Then you may as well know that I am the leader of a band of smugglers. I suppose you will arrest me now. You may think I am fooling, but come."

She led him through a patch of woods to a clearing, and they paused on the edge. In the open space he saw a group of shanties, with a crowd of rough-clad, fierce-looking men busy moving boxes and bales from a motor truck to a shed.

"My gang," she said simply. "Are you going to arrest me?"

"You are under arrest," he said. "Duty before love, you know."

He took her by an arm and led her to the river.

"Where are you taking me?" she asked, pausing on her ledge high above the water.

"To the jail at Randall Beach," he said. "We'll go in my canoe."

She smiled and seated herself on a stone.

"I was just fooling you—to see if you were a man who realized his responsibilities. I am head of a smuggling band, true enough, but it is in the movies. I am Lorelei Evertson, sometimes called the 'diving queen,' and my company is shooting smuggling scenes on the river. You asked me some time ago if I loved you, and I answer 'yes' now; because you have stood the test—duty first. But there is one thing I must insist on. Before I marry you, you must learn to swim. I love the water and you must love it too."

He laughed, rather boyishly.

"I have been fooling you, too. I never said I was a revenue officer, and I am not. I am swimming instructor at Randall Beach. I had to pretend I was drowning that day, in order to get acquainted with you. I knew you were Lorelei Evertson, and I have loved you a long time."

Her Present Occupation.

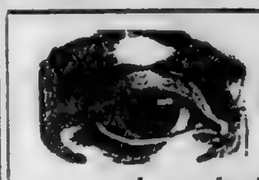
"You say that your wife went to college before you married her?"



"Yes, she did."

"And she thought of taking up law, you said?"

"Yes; but now she's satisfied to lay it down."

A SUNNY DISPOSITION

A very charming old lady says that if she had the power to choose the best from all the good things in life, she would not ask for wealth, because of its responsibilities; she would not ask for beauty, because of its strain upon character; she would not ask for health, glorious as the treasure is, nor for genius; but she "would pray for a sunny disposition, as the boon which confers more happiness upon its owner, and more happiness upon those with whom one comes in contact, than any other which falls to the lot of any human creature."

Most people would see nothing worth while in this poor woman's life. Some would even commit suicide were they situated as she is; yet she manages to find something beautiful, something worth treasuring up in the memory even in the darkest days of sorrow.

The trouble is, we amphasize the wrong things. If we were a little better off, if we had what our neighbors have, we think we should be happy. Yet we know perfectly well that many of the most miserable people in the world are rich.

We have no right to carry about in our faces and bearing the black banner or anarchy. We have no right to flaunt a gloomy picture in the faces of those who are struggling to rise above their troubles and trials.—Selected.

That Sweetheart Booth

By MARGARET M. LUKES

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Kathleen Higgins ran down the hall of the flat into her room and stood there in the dark for a breathless moment before she struck a match. Then in the sudden glare of gaslight her eyes darted to the bureau. They traveled furtively to the little table in the center of the room. Kathleen gave a deep sigh and threw her beaded bag down on the bed.

There was no letter. It was three days now.

She looked in the mirror and suddenly a great hate for herself and her cheap prettiness arose in her. There she stood like a little blonde doll, frizzled hair, flashy clothes, painted lips. And what did it get her? Not even an invitation to the White Palace Friday night. The angry look slowly faded from Kathleen's eyes and something like pain took its place. Charlie Hayes was getting tired of her. Some one who got more than $20 a week pounding a typewriter, some one who could spend more money on clothes than she could had won him away from her.

In their weariness her eyes caught the eyes of her mother looking sweetly at her from out the frame on the bureau. Her lips trembled. All the things she had thrown away to come to the city six months ago, the country town home she had been ashamed to tell big, handsome, stylish Charlie Hayes about suddenly became most dear to her. She had not even sent her father a birthday present. Remorse and shame crept into her heart. A wave of defiance followed. Did he, with his fine clothes and his money every other night in the week, think she was going to forget her own people just so she could have gay things to wear and go to the White Palace to dance? Let him have Rosanna Finnegan with her lace stockings and a new hat every pay day. She would show him.

It was two days later, just as the winter sun was setting, that Kathleen stood on the shabby station platform at Frackville, stood there in her plain blue coat, then rushed pell-mell into the arms of her mother. She had let them know. She had wanted just this. Dad trying to tell her about the big new Giant Tire company plant—hadn't she read it in the city papers? Jack jumping up and down at her side yelling about his skates. And mother! Through the voices of them all she could somehow hear her mother's.

A Center of Attraction.

"For good, dear, you've come," she said, "not just a visit?"

"Nope, mummy, for good," Kathleen answered as they bundled her into a little car which was an acquisition since her departure. "Came home to make pies for daddy, and, say, daddy, can I learn to run this thing?"

"You bet your life you can, but your mother's going to keep you mighty busy for the next few days. Signed you up for the fair. Can I tell her, mother? . . . All right, here goes, sis. They've signed you up for the 'Sweetheart Booth.' What you know about that? Thought you, being in the city, could give them cards and spades—"

And that evening after the piping hot biscuits and the fricasseed chicken and the cheery conversation in the cozy kitchen they whisked her off to a committee meeting of the fair. What fun it was to say hello to everybody again! The girls wanted to know if she still knew how to make cake, the boys wanted to know if any one in the city had cut them out. There were endless plans to be gone over. What did she think of this? What did she think of that? Here, she was wanted, Kathleen thought. It was good to be home!

But up in her little white-curtained room that night Kathleen stood for a long while in the moonlight and looked out the window. To say you are going to forget is one thing; to really forget, another.

Now came three wild, flurried days of cake baking, crepe paper twisting and goodness only knows what. Then at last the night of the fair itself—clear, sparkling and moonlit.

The "sweetheart booth," needless to say, was a center of attraction. Here eager-eyed girls in bright-colored dresses stood ready to be "bought" for dances. One white dress stood out in contrast to the others. It was Kathleen's. "I'm tired of colors," she told her mother, and brought forth a ruffly summer thing. Her pretty golden hair was combed softly about her forehead. With her cheeks just softly pink as she whirled in the arms of one partner after another she was very lovely indeed. If there was a look of wistfulness in her blue eyes nobody noticed. There was too much noise, too much gaiety, for that.

Nobody noticed either when, at ten o'clock, Kathleen threw her white wool scarf over her shoulders and slipped quietly out the side door. That "sweetheart booth!" Boys and girls looking things into each other's eyes. She could not stand it any longer. She made her way slowly down to the orchard where she played when she was a little girl.

All at once she realized some one else was there. Some one tall, with his hands in his pockets, was walking slowly in her direction. Kathleen stood stock-still. Her heart turned a somersault. Was she dreaming this? There in the moonlight Charles Hayes took the last steps toward her.

"Kathleen!" he cried as though he, too, were seeing a vision. "What are you doing here—out in the country?"

"It's where I live, Charlie," she answered in a strained little voice. "I only pretended I was a city girl—I lied." Kathleen was deeply ashamed. Then, "But, Charlie, what—what are you doing here?"

"Wearing out my heart for you," he said in boyish, even tones. "I ran away from you because I was broke. I was always afraid to stop taking you to places because I was afraid I'd lose you. Then I found out I couldn't keep it up any longer. I had to forget about you. You were out of my class. I couldn't even say good-by. I read about this new Giant Tire company in the paper, and that's where I am now. A bunch of the fellows came over to this stunt tonight. I took a look in. Everybody was too happy—I just couldn't stay. That sweetheart booth—"

"That's where I was—at the sweetheart booth." She was like a fairy there in the old orchard. "It's where you buy sweethearts."

He stood there looking at her mutely. "Do you have to go inside to buy one?" he asked huskily. But he did not wait for his answer. Tight in his arms she heard him choke forth his love and then his own confession.

"I was a country boy, honey. I lied, too—lied to try to win you."

POE WAS AGAINST BOTTLE

Cousin Tells Author That Many Literary Men Have Sought to Drown Their Sorrows.

An excerpt from a letter sent to Edgar Allan Poe by his cousin, William Poe, is of interest to everyone who has read "The Gold Bug." It was dated June 15, 1843:

"I observed in the Baltimore Sun newspaper in an editorial that you have again lately been successful in having awarded to you a prize of $100 by the 'Dollar Newspaper' for a tale called "The Gold Bug," which gave me much pleasure, and hope it came in time to relieve you of some of your pecuniary wants. * * * There is one thing I am anxious to caution you against, and which has been a great enemy to our family—I hope, however, in your case unnecessary—'a too free use of the bottle.' Too many, and especially literary characters, have sought to drown their sorrows and disappointments by this means, but in vain, and only when it was too late, discovered it to be a deeper source of misery."

Poe got $10 for "The Raven."

Free Air.

The modern ideas on education are all very well so far as they go, but there is an old and well-cried proverb which says that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. Perhaps this is why Johnny Jones' essay on air ran like this:

"Breath is made of air. We breathe always with our lungs, except at night, when our breath keeps life going through our noses while we are asleep. If it wasn't for our breath we should die whenever we slept.

"Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait until they get outdoors. A lot of boys staying in a room make carbonicide, and carbonicide is more poisonous than mad dogs, though not just in the same way. It does not bite, but that's no matter so long as it kills you."—Houston Post.

Or Rarely Ever.

"You used to cook for Mrs. Gadder?" asked Mrs. Glipping.

"Yes, mum."

"Does that woman ever stay at home?"

"Well, mum, now that's queer. You're askin' me the same question poor Mr. Gadder used to come back in the kitchen an' ask me two or three times a week, an' I see to you as I see to him, she never do."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

In Quest of Freedom.

"The beauteous one is going to Reno, you say."

"Yes, for her health."

"I didn't know Reno was a health resort."

"She says her husband makes her sick."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

GEYSERS SPOUT IN ICELAND

Fountains of Boiling Liquid Furnish Sight That Is Said to Be Really Magnificent.

There are hot-water fountains of Iceland. They are on mounds averaging seven feet in height, the tops of which form a sort of basin. From these basins the steam of boiling water can be seen arising and the overflow of water is continuous. The contents of these basins is as clear as crystal and one can see to a great depth, while just below the surface are many wonderfully beautiful white incrustations. The petrification caused by the boiling water streams from the geysers include birch and willow leaves, grass and rushes seemingly converted into marble.

At no time is it entirely safe to loiter in the vicinity of one of these bottomless basins, for the geyser has a way of spouting and gives no advance warning. Sometimes there will be a shoot of boiling water to a height of 15 feet, followed by a succession of jets. The highest shoot of which there is any record was 90 feet. Occasionally a basin will for some unexplained reason become entirely empty, or will give forth a "steam-shoot," which in the form of a column of spray and vapor at least 60 feet in height presents a really magnificent spectacle.

Signs Were Bad.

A husky negro applied for a job in a big ship building company and his fine figure and strength got him accepted. He was told to report to a certain department in the end of a mammoth building.

He hadn't gone ten feet before he saw a sign hung above an alcove reading: "Stretcher Here." Duplicates of this assailed his eye here and there, and then came a bigger sign which read: "To the Hospital." The odor of ether and other smells filled his nostrils and he turned back.

"Boss," he said to the man who had hired him, "Ah resigns. Ah'm through."

"Why, Sam, what's the matter? You're not afraid of danger, are you?"

"Nossuh, boss, danger Ah craves, but not wilful destruction, no suh!"—American Legion Weekly.

Hilltop Social Affairs

If one were strolling near Highland Avenue School these busy days, there might come to one's ears, the directions "Down Stage," "Louder," "More emphasis," etc. The occasion is one of the steady rehearsals of the 9A graduating class play entitled, "All on account of Polly," coached by Miss Dorothy Dyer, teacher of Dramatics at the Highland Avenue School. Progress is being made to such a degree that we have the promise of an excellent play, which is to be presented Friday, May 12th, at the West High School Auditorium. The play depicts the life of the rich, aristocratic Beverly family, who spend money faster than the head of the house can earn it. Into this clouded atmosphere of selfishness, deceit and false show come. Polly Perkins (a typical Pollyanna type) from the New England Berkshire Hills. She really works miracles reforming the wealthy Beverly family and falling in love with the son, Baldwin.

The play affords excellent opportunity for the actors, as it abounds in good dramatic situations as well as numerous touches of extreme comedy—all on account of Polly. The cast of characters is as follows:

Ralph Beverly, Polly's guardian, Oscar Nader; Baldwin, his son, Walter Kidd; Peter Hartleigh, Englishman, Joe Thirtyacre; Harkins, a butler, James Miller; Silas Young, a money lender, Ralph Welch; Tommy, a poor little boy, Ralph Montgomery; Polly Perkins, a small town girl, Clara Slyh; Jane Beverly, the wife, Helen Dial; Hortense, her elder daughter, Dorothy Prior; Geraldine, her younger daughter, Helen Oliver; Mrs. Clarence Chadfield, Meredith Shockley, Mrs. Feather-Stone, Miss Bushnell, hairdresser, Helen Glick; Miss Rembrandt, manicurist, Anna Moore; Marie, a maid, Ruth Mills; Pudgy, Tommy's sister, Evelyn Poulson.

The play will begin at 8 p. m. and seats will go on sale Monday May 8th. General admission is 25 cents, and reserved seats 35c. Reservations will be made at the school, Monday, 8th, up till the day of the play. Let's all plan to attend.

The pupils of West Broad Street School will give an entertainment on May 19th at 2 p. m. and 8 p. m. There will be living pictures, music and folk dancing.

Clarence W. Dean, of 69 N. Park Ave., and Miss Hazel Ferguson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Ferguson were married last Saturday evening, by Rev. R. T. Stimmel, at the Glenwood Church parsonage Mr. Dean is employed at the Rider Hardware Store. They expect to reside at 69 N. Park Ave. The newly married couple have the best wishes of all their numerous friends.

The Second Number of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce started off in an interesting manner Monday morning. Already several prizes have been claimed by parties holding circulars containing the lucky number. At the last number hunt there were 107 prizes offered and 5000 circulars put out, making a ratio of one lucky number to each 50 circulars. This time there are 300 prizes and 3000 circulars printed and all put out which makes a lucky number to each 10 circulars, or the chance of obtaining a prize five times as great as the last time. If you have a circular get busy and find some prize.

Through an accident the name of Mr. C. E. Kellar, wall paper dealer, at Broad and Oakley was omitted from the circular. He is offering as a prize, choice of wall paper for one room. His number appears at his store. Keep it in mind.

Change of Firm

Fourteen years ago, when the Hilltop was "but a child" in age, Mr. L. M. Seiller embarked in the dry goods business, Seiller in the room now occupied by the Economy Store. Later a new and more commodious building was erected and he moved his store into it. By honest fair dealing he built up a business that was a credit to our community. Three years ago, his brother, Mr. M. W. Seiller, moved to the Hilltop and entered into partnership, the firm being known as Seillers Bros., and the store has kept on growing till it is now one of the best stores of its kind in the city.

Mr. L. M. Seiller, who has for the past two years also been engaged in the building and contracting business, known as Barnhart and Seiller Co., has decided to give all his time to that business, therefore will retire from the merchantile business—his brother, Mr. M. W. Seiller, having boughtout his interest in the dry goods store.

Mr. M. W. Seiller, who is now the sole owner of this store, during his three years in our community has gained so many friends that it is useless to say anything more than "to know him is to like him."

We wish for Mr. M. W. Seillers abundant of success in the store; also Mr. L. M. Seiller just as great success in the building business.

This Year's Chautauqua

When the Redpath chautauqua comes to the Hilltop, July 15 to July 21, inclusive, patrons will be sheltered under a new tent that is the last word in canvas construction. Musically, the chautauqua offers not only light, but also Knight MasGregor, New York baritone, and assisting artists: the Lillian Johnston Company; Metropolitan Orchestra; Dunbar Male Quartet and Bell Ringers, and the Keller Sisters of Pasadena, California. It is believed that Knight MasGregor will prove one of the most popular singers ever brought to the local chautauqua. John B. Ratto, impersonator; Charles G. Jordan, legislator, "dirt farmer" and speaker extraordinary; Jesse H. Holmes in an up-to-the-minute interpretation of newspaper headlines; Dr. Charles S. Medbury of Des Moines; Montaville Flowers of California, and Elwood T. Bailey in his live-wire "All Aboard!" talk, are other attractions listed for the summer assembly.

"Conquests of Peace" is the theme of the timely junior pageant to be offered by local boys and girls at the close of chautauqua week. In addition, the "kiddies" will have seven days of interesting stories and games, under a professional director from the Columbia College of Expression in Chicago.

The S. P. I. Class of Glenwood Church will hold their regular monthly business meeting, Monday evening, May 8, at 7:30, in the Sunday School room. All members are urged to be present.

QUOTATIONS FROM THE COMPLETE HERBALIST

"Zellon Dock is an alternative tonic and detergent. For all impurities of the blood it has no equal.

"Bloodroot grows in shaded woods. It presents a beautiful appearance when cut and placed under a microscope, seeming like an aggregation of minute precious stones. It is useful in bronchitis. It excites the energies of a torpid liver. Prickly ash is a native of North America. It is highly beneficial in chronic rheumatism and whenever an alternative is required."

We are citing these quotations that you may know the excellent qualities of Ke-O-Ka. (Five other extracts of plants and barks that harmonize), make Ke-O-Ka worthy of the reputation that it has achieved.

Publisher Record:

Permit me to express thanks to those citizens who have so graciously expressed their gratitude for a recent article of mine in the Record, relating to the worldly ways pursued by some churches in our city like rummage sales and the sale of pies and cakes and bread and other articles which has such a decided tendency to disgust many thoughtful people with churches and decidedly hinders the growth of the church. It is a shame, saying the least, for any church to give the impression that its members are so poor they cannot pay the pastor's salary and meet their current expenses without going into the baking and lecture and concert business.

If pastors would teach and train their members to tythe there would always be plenty of money in the church treasuries and our Lord would not be made to blush in seeing some of His people literally begging for His church for which He died of a broken and bleeding heart.

Millie, the Wallflower

By CLARISSA MACKIE

©, 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Who is the girl in the corner?" asked Mark Wynne of his young hostess.

"Oh, that is Millie Parker—pretty, isn't she? But she can't dance, or doesn't want to—they call her the 'wallflower'—they are a thoughtless bunch!" and with a charming upward lift of her shoulder the most thoughtless one of all turned with him and swung again into the music of the dance.

Doctor Wynne could not dance very well and Elsie was glad to lose him for one of her own set, a graceful, black-eyed youth who sparkled as the town wit.

"Who is that sitting with Millie Parker?" asked Elsie suddenly.

"The medicine man is sitting in the shadow of the wallflower," sighed George.

"He cannot be enjoying himself," worried Elsie.

"If looks count he is having the time of his life—and say, Elsie, she looks pretty tonight in that blue dress," he added.

"Where is Alfred Brown?" asked Elsie, changing the subject.

"Sh-h-h. Whisper it—the fever!"

"No! That makes thirty cases in town."

Elsie was silent after that. The epidemic had started, as such things usually do, in an unhealthy slum near the river's edge—there had been whispers of polluted drinking water—of milk bottles washed in the river water—sanitation rules violated, and the town authorities were confronted with a grave situation.

Mark Wynne was passing through the little town from a hunting trip in the North and stopped to see his old friend, the father of Elsie Lee, so his appearance at the little party was a happy accident.

Long after he had retired that night he thought of the dread disease which was sweeping through Laneboro, and he thought of something Millie Parker had said to him that evening while her young companions fox-trotted around them.

Millie Had Come.

"We need nurses," said Millie thoughtfully.

"They can be sent from town—easily," exclaimed Mark, with a mental note to start something when he returned to the city.

"We have thirty here now—one for each case—and now we shall need more. Doctor Wynne, do you think I could help in some case—I have taken care of six people, my own, until they went—and there is no reason why I could not help save a life—I am alone except for some cousins with whom I live." She watched him expectantly.

"Have you any fear of the disease?"

"No."

"Then you might do—you could help a regular trained nurse—relieve her. I will see what I can do."

But when two days later he tried to get word to Millie Parker he learned to his dismay that she had gone to a farmhouse three miles away to nurse an old man who was very ill.

"Poor as poverty herself, and gone to nurse a man who hasn't money enough to pay for his own medicine," complained Millie's elderly cousin.

"Cannot pay for his own medicine?" repeated the doctor. "I'll take that case myself. I came down to help out, and Miss Millie's case sounds like a desperate one."

"Desperately foolish," grumbled the timid soul as she closed the door gently behind him.

Millie did not question Mark's unexpected arrival at the plain little house on the rocky hillside. Old Peter Jenkins was very sick—he would never be any better—it was impossible to find any one to stay with him—he had no relatives, and so Millie had come.

"She's a pretty little girl," piped Peter in one of his lucid moments; "reminds me of my Susie—little and always tender and careful of old folks. Susie's sleeping out there on the hillside along with her ma and her sisters and brothers. They left me all alone, and I'm just waiting for me word to go. Seems as if it would never come," he added querulously.

Millie flitted into the room with a cup and spoon. "Just a little bit of this, Uncle Peter," she coaxed. "See I'll take a taste myself first to keep you company." The old man smiled wanly and took the medicine, his dim eyes following the blithe young form around the room. "She's as sweet and wholesome as them wallflowers my wife planted along the stone wall," he murmured.

Millie blushed as she met the young doctor's eyes, for she knew that he had heard her nickname of Wallflower.

One day Peter had a visitor, a grave-looking man, who stayed for awhile and talked in a low tone to the sick man. The next day he came again and brought some other people with him. Doctor Wynne frowned on this, but Mr. Jenkins had his own way.

It was Millie who sat through the long night alone with the dying man; it was Millie who talked with him about Susie and the other children and the wife who had passed on before and who were all waiting for his coming on that other shore.

"And you, little Wallflower," he whispered, "what of you, all alone in the world?"

"I shall find a way," said Millie bravely, trying not to cry over his going, for he did not want to stay. "I am learning to nurse sick people. Taking care of you has helped me, and some day I shall go to a large hospital training school for nurses and—"

"No, no, you will do nothing of the sort, you shall marry Doctor Wynne. He loves you, little Wallflower, and you love him. My eyes are dim, but I could see that!" He smiled cheerfully at her, and she hid her blushing face in her white apron and received his blessing on her bent head. Mark Wynne crept away from the room and Millie did not know, that he had heard those words until long afterward. Before morning dawned again Peter Jenkins' happy spirit had winged upward alone.

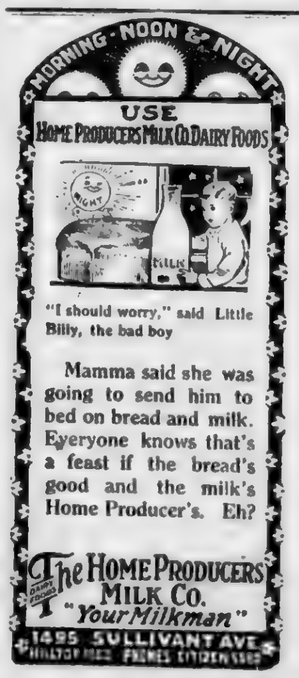
A few days afterward, when the house was empty of its tenant and Millie was preparing to leave, the strange lawyer came to see her.

"Peter Jenkins left a will," he said tersely. "He died a rich man. You are his sole heir."

The little Wallflower, who thought she had nursed a poor man, broke down and cried miserably. The lawyer took himself off and sent for Mark Wynne.

"You remember Mr. Jenkins' prophesy, don't you, Millie?" he asked.

"You heard?" flashed Millie.



"Yes, and it is coming true, little Wallflower, isn't it?" he whispered.

"Millie Parker married?" shrieked Elsie Smith incredulously. "That little wallflower?"

The Capture of Billy Drake

By ROSE MEREDITH

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

Elizabeth viewed the blue wrap with some disfavor. It had been bought weeks ago, when her engagement to Billy Drake had been the newest and the most wonderful thing in the world, and the long silken fringe which bordered the wide sleeves had persuaded her to decide upon the garment. Billy had admired its graceful lines—he had played with the fringe as he talked of their glorious future together—they had laughed like children over the various things that the fringes ensnared, autumn leaves, wisps of flying paper, once a downy feather from some passing bird. And then, afterward, when a foolish misunderstanding had clouded everything, Elizabeth had pulled off her ring—his ring—and dropped it into his reluctant hand.

The ring fell and, dropping, the delicate setting caught on the wretched fringe! He had laughed grimly as he set about its dislodgement.

"I hate the old thing!" she half sobbed, as she brought it from the wardrobe and tossed it about her shoulders. The day was cold and her suit was rather light in weight for the advancing season.

Outside, the wind was moaning among the bare branches, and as she walked briskly toward the trolley car the heart of the little music teacher felt bleak and bare as the empty nests in the swaying trees.

As the car moved on, Elizabeth thought of the uninteresting lesson she was going to teach—Annie Smith, a child who had insisted upon learning to play "Hearts and Flowers"—and there had been many, many lessons, but Annie still stumbled over the same passages until Elizabeth was ready to cry with vexation.

Today Annie was more exasperating than usual; she had hinted that her mother was not pleased with her progress, and she had stumbled and fallen weeping over the dreaded passage in the old favorite.

"I Am Sorry, Eliz—Miss Russell."

To her own surprise, Elizabeth comforted the child—for a while she forgot her own loneliness and pain, while she brought a smile to wet blue eyes and sullen lips. "Let us try again," she suggested gently, and, to their mutual surprise, they had tried again and conquered. It was a glad little face that was lifted to Elizabeth's sad one when the hour was ended.

"You have made me glad again," smiled Annie Smith.

Elizabeth thought of those words as she waited for the car that was to take her home. Would anything ever make her glad again? She knew that, behind her own little air of bravado, she carried an aching heart that never could be glad again without Billy Drake. She brushed away hot tears and entered the car with a dash of autumn red in her cheeks. Some one moved along to make room for her, a strong hand steadied her as the car lurched forward.

"Thank you," she turned and smiled mechanically at—Billy Drake, resuming his seat beside her! The wrap settled innocently about her slender form. Billy was replacing his hat, and, with a dear familiar gesture, was quite unconsciously smoothing the back of his sleek head. She saw it all—she knew it—she felt him so near, and all the while she sat straight and small, looking straight ahead out of brown pansy eyes. Any one sitting beside her might have thought her lovely face haughty and relentless.

The flat-wheeled car clattered merrily on its way and Elizabeth noted with a heartsick pang that they were near Queen street, her stopping place. Billy was probably going home—he lived a mile beyond Queen street, and when would she meet him again, even by accident?

"Queen!" bellowed the conductor, as the car rocked to a standstill.

Elizabeth rose, swept the folds of her blue wrap about her and started for the door. She felt a sickening tug at the long fringe of her right sleeve. She would not look around. A wave of pink colored her face as she felt a slight weight on her sleeve—what was the wretched fringe doing now? Had it caught in some one's umbrella, or pocketbook? Billy Drake had sat on her right—she would not look around, for there was a tittering laugh behind her. Some one else was getting off directly behind her.

"Step lively, there!" sang out the motorman jovially, as the car rocked away on its flat-wheeled career.

Elizabeth whirled around and confronted Billy Drake's amused and, at the same time, apologetic smile.

"I am sorry, Eliz—Miss Russell—I couldn't help it, you can see that—"

"Help what?" she asked frostily.

At the same instant she looked down and saw—saw the fringe of her right sleeve wound impishly around one of the buttons of his overcoat. In this way had she innocently ensnared him in the car, had led him down the aisle and here he was!

What an intolerable position.

"I didn't expect to get off here," he apologized; "I was going on to King street—"

"I am very sorry," she said stiffly, and then in a sudden burst of vexation she added: "Why didn't you cut it off? Break it off. Now it's a wretched string!" She pulled vigorously at the silken tangle of knotted threads.

He stood helplessly watching her stormy little face. His stern face softened. How unhappy they both were! How like children; breaking precious hours of their lives with silly misunderstandings. Were they always to be enemies?

He had even forgotten what it was all about.

Elizabeth gave one last tug and the threads snapped. The sudden release caused her to waver uncertainly. Billy's hand supported her—lingered on her arm—stayed there boldly, as of old.

"I don't want to be set free," he said uncertainly, and Elizabeth, looking up, saw that his pleasant face was white, very white.

"I—don't—quite understand," stammered the girl.

"I will explain as we go along," he said, still holding tight to her arm. "It is growing colder—hear the wind!"

So they walked along Queen street as they had walked before the blue cape had entered their lives. Billy Drake explained and Elizabeth listened and murmured soft little answers, and they lingered in the tiny living room, where a fire whispered on the hearth. When Billy went home he went whistling down the street in the old happy way, and Elizabeth was dropping a kiss on the precious ring on her third finger. As the blue wrap was hung away in the wardrobe Elizabeth gave it a little hug.

"You blessed old peacemaker!" she whispered.

GETS MANY "REPEATS"

Presents of Princess Mary Show Remarkable Assortment.

Many Wonder What Newlyweds Will Do With 16 Jugs, 22 Clocks, 16 Silver Toast Racks and 28 Tea Services.

London.—The vast number and varied assortment of wedding presents to Princess Mary and Viscount Lascelles displayed here caused many people to wonder what the newlyweds would do with the 16 jugs and bowls, 16 silver toast racks and 22 clocks in the offerings.

The late King Edward, after his marriage, found himself the possessor of 1,500 teapots of all types and descriptions, and of more than 800 cruets. It is reported that some of these are still stored in London.

Only persons who had been presented at court or who could claim personal acquaintance with either Princess Mary or her husband were permitted to tender gifts on the occasion of the recent royal wedding. Charitable and other public organizations and institutions were, of course, excepted.

This ruling perhaps saved Princess Mary the embarrassment over disposing of teapots and cruets suffered by King Edward.

A classification of the gifts exhibited at St. James' palace shows only 28 tea services were presented. Other items are 158 articles of jewelry, including bracelets, necklaces, pendants, tiaras, brooches, rings, caskets, fans and watches; a trayful of flawless, unset precious stones, 883 gifts made from precious metals, including 29 trays, 24 vases, 31 cups, 12 goblets, 18 inkstands, 25 statuettes, 14 card trays, 9 cigaret cases, 8 traveling cases and 7 workboxes; 197 books and manuscripts, 22 candelabra, 17 umbrellas, 14 lamps and shades, 17 rugs, 22 sets of cutlery, 8 wall brackets, 36 dinner services, 47 breakfast table services, 18 silver salvers, 70 pairs of gloves, 10 wedding cakes and 7 hunting crops.

While correspondents invited to a private view were being shown the state rooms where the presents were on display, the 22 gift clocks all began the chiming at 6 o'clock at almost the same instant—and the newspaper party was ushered out as it had been invited to call "between 5 and 6 p. m."

IS CHAMPION ATHLETE

Miss Betty Schenkel, captain of the Pennsylvania railroad basketball team—the unbeaten "five" of the league, who shines in all branches of athletics and sports. She is out with a declaration that she challenges any other girl in America to a decathlon of sports for the world's championship. "Pick the sports and she will beat 'em all"—the sports critics of Philadelphia claim. She holds all kinds of cups, medals, ribbons, certificates and other prizes for athletic accomplishments. Whether it is roller skating or bike racing—its all the same—Miss Schenkel leads all others of the fair sex when it comes to sports. She was born in Atlantic City, but now she lives in Philadelphia. She is an expert at billiards. She used to play football on a boy's team at Atlantic City, the only girl in a regular game. She captained a soccer team and is a really good boxer.

CRABS USED AS WATCHDOGS

West Indian Species Are Said to Be Remarkably Effective in Keeping Off Intruders.

How would you like a crab in the house instead of a dog, to give warning of unwelcome visitors? Land crabs are used for this purpose in the West Indies.

These particular crabs are about the size of a football, with enormous eyes and feelers. The big claw is usually well developed, being almost the same size as the body. When alarmed the crab holds this claw up in a very threatening attitude.

Crabs are naturally intelligent, and this species shows both affection and faithfulness to those with whom they are in frequent contact. Their strength and speed are amazing, and any intruder will have as much difficulty in releasing the grip of a crab as he will that of an English bulldog which has taken a firm hold.

Silent Threat.

A farmer, being short of teams, hitched a mule and an ox together to help with the hauling. When the team had gone a mile down the road the ox stopped, lay down, and refused to go further. The farmer said nothing; simply unhitched the animal, returned it to the stable, and made the mule pull the wagon the rest of the day.

That night the ox spoke to the mule confidentially. "What did the boss say today?" he asked. "Nothing that I heard," replied the mule. The next day the ox was hitched with the mule again. This time he lay down at the end of half a mile. Again the farmer calmly unhitched him, put him back in the stable, and made the mule do the hauling.

"What did the boss say this time?" asked the ox that night. "I didn't hear him say anything," replied the mule, "but he's leaning over the fence out there talking to a butcher."

A very enjoyable time was had Saturday afternoon at a birthday party given in honor of Edna Keefer. Those present were: Dorothy Horton, Mary Williker, Helen Parrott, Ona Butler, Wilma Krena Sword, Rexine Dye, Violet Dague, Thelma Nassano, Catherine Postle, Virginia Bostwick, Inas Hitchcock, Edith Gate-, Elsie Hill, Helen Peart, Elizabeth Hunt, Mary James, Armaida Schoeman, Edmund Mollencup. Many games were played. Refreshments were served.

The entertainment given by the Kitchen Cabinet Orchestra of the Hoge Memorial Church on Wednesday evening, May 3, was a decided success. The different instruments used by the company were unique and artistic to the 'steenth degree. In appreciation of the splendid rendition of the musical numbers, displaying that wonderful and rare talent so much enjoyed by lovers of good music, and on behalf of the husbands of the ladies composing the orchestra, a loving cup was presented the ladies in a highly appropriate speech by G. W. Matson.

Not to be outclassed by the ladies orchestra, the "Imitation Song," directed by Mr. McConnell and his company of famed vocalists, proved a pleasing number of the program. Mrs. C. H. Nowell, accompanied at the piano. An addition to the program was a "mock" wedding featured by little Helen Jones, bride and Master George Matson, groom.

---

The Boy Scouts of Troop 21, which meets at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church are planning a hike this summer to several places of historical interest in the southern part of Ohio. To help meet expenses they are going to give a "feed" at their troop headquarters, on Saturday, May 20th.

A scout is thrifty and earns his own way and expenses. This is your opportunity to help and they guarantee more for 20 cents than you can get any place in the city.

Mr. C. J. Kohn, who has for several years had charge of the Hilltop Undertaking Co., has severed his connection with that firm and established a new funeral home, known as C. J. Kohn Funeral Director, having purchased the Smith property at Eldon Ave. and Broad St. The building has been undergoing a thorough remodeling, and will be one of the prettiest and most convenient funeral homes in Columbus. A commodious chapel is installed, with piano, also a splendid morgue and preparation room. A separate office and business room, with large varanda on both sides of it, certainly will make it a pretty place. The whole has been fitted up with elegant hardwood floors, with walls and ceilings decorated in gray tint.

Mr. and Mrs. Kohn have gained hosts of friends while on the Hilltop, and all who wish for them abundant success in their new location.

POEM FOR MOTHERS' DAY
"OUR MOTHER"

There is one thing in this world
That is sweeter than all the rest;
And that is our dear mother,
The one that we love best.

She is first like a Spring Beauty,
As happy and gay as the rest;
And then, she is old and weary,
But still we love her best.

Infant Grows More Teeth.

Duluth, Minn.—Physicians are marveling over the case of Alice Margaret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matt Collins of Hinckley, Minn., who although less than a month old, has grown two sets of teeth. A dentist extracted two teeth from the infant's mouth two weeks after birth. Physicians examined the infant afterward and discovered two more teeth growing in the place of those extracted. The infant is reported to be normal otherwise.

The Sunday School has made fine progress under the superintendency of Mr. E. R. Evans, on the first Sunday four years ago there were 76 present and now there are around two hundred every Sunday. Come! Let's make it the banner day of the church thus far. There will be autos for those who cannot otherwise get there. If you will get in touch with the pastor they will be sent for you.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST

Dr. G. R. Robbins will preach Sunday on these topics: A. M.—"The Mother of Moses." P. M.—"The Presentation of Our Bodies Unto the Greatest God in the Universe."

What do you think of those Seventeen Theologians of Columbus? Some of them long ago have given up their weekly prayer meetings, and in a short time may be out of the ministry and their names will be forgotten. They are not even original for all they say was years ago spoken over in Germany. Their sayings are a rehash of German Theology, and you know that led on to the most awful war in all history.

Let's remember that while they are misled and deceived, there were in our city last Sunday at least an hundred and fifty ministers believing the Holy Scriptures to be nothing less than the inspired word of God and preaching the whole gospel of Jesus Christ. If these preachers would cut out their nonsense and preach the powerful gospel of Jesus Christ we would soon see the greatest religious awakening this old world ever saw. This is a consumation devoutly to be desired.

G. R. Robbins.

RESULT OF KINDERGARTEN

Children Have Fuller Appreciation of Beautiful in Nature and Art as Result of Training.

Spencer says we must educate so that we may know how to use all our faculties to the greatest advantage to ourselves and others—and thus learn to live completely. That is what the kindergarten training does. It fortifies one with a profession whose aim is service to one of those little ones," and thus it brings content. There are many who can attest the truth that life for them has been infinitely richer and more interesting; that they have a fuller appreciation of the beautiful in nature and in art; that they now know a measure of content not experienced before, since their capacities have been developed naturally through kindergarten training. Froebel gave the invitation, "Come, let us live with our children," and it is the great opportunity for the young woman of today. To live with them, direct their work, and share their play is wholly absorbing. And to her who fits herself for this task will come the joy and blessing which are the essence of true service.

New Wrinkle in Panhandling.

A new development of the ancient art of panhandling is reported from the eat-quick lunch chairs. The artist must needs be ragged and woebegone, in accordance with the traditions of his craft. He gets a cup of coffee, explains the New York Sun, and holds the check for it in his hand as he seats himself in one of those chairs of which the arms serve the purpose of tables.

Huskily addressing his neighbor in the next chair, he says:

"If you have anything left on your plate would you please give it to me? I only have the price of the coffee."

Needless to say, the disconcerted neighbor fishes out some change, gives it to the panhandler and tells him to buy something to eat. But if the operator's subsequent actions be watched it will be seen that instead of buying food he practices his new trick on some other victim. And the indications are that he is making a fair income.

John G. Pfaltzraf, son of Nicholas and Barbara Pfaltzraf was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, August 13, 1857, and departed this life May 4, 1922, at 167 S. Terrace Street. Aged 64 years, 8 months and 19 days.

He leaves to mourn his departure a devoted wife, one son, one daughter, eight grandchildren, two brothers, four sisters and a host of relatives and friends.

The Courtship of Leander

By CLARISSA MACKIE

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Leander Hutchins rattled up the village street in his noisy little car, scattering a flock of chickens in the middle of the road, narrowly missing a collision with a load of hay, and finally coming to a standstill before the snug white cottage of Capt. Dan Bruce. Even now, when it had rested from its perilous trip, the automobile was loath to be silent. It snored hysterically, so that it aroused the ire of Captain Dan, who trotted swiftly around the shell-bordered path to the front gate.

"What you bringing that giggling old craft around here for, Leander?" he complained. "I was feeding my hens and they's all scudded off, and it'll take a lot more of bait to catch 'em again."

Leander grinned, showing his strong, white teeth. He was young and brown and lean and lazy, and was poor. He had acquired the old car through a series of accidents (in all of which the car had figured) and his casual acquaintance with a junk dealer. Now the car was the official bus that ran to the railroad station, and Leander had the contract to carry the mail. And, in an almost imperceptible degree, Leander was improving. He was saving money and thinking of getting married.

He confided this last determination to Captain Dan this mild winter afternoon.

"Married?" the captain lifted his head quickly and regarded Leander from his keen, frosty blue eyes that seemed the color of the blue seas he had sailed, laced with white foam. His color was fresh and ruddy, and his lean cheeks were clean shaven, with a strong line of jaw and a good, humorous mouth. "Married?" he repeated again. "Picked out any one as yet, Leander?"

"Perhaps," said Leander, cautiously. "You can laugh, Dan—maybe you're thinking of getting married yourself?"

"Dassen't change my luck," muttered the bachelor captain, his blue eyes fixed on the distant horizon. "You said you wanted my help. What can I do?"

"Tell her—I—well, I haven't got the nerve, Dan. Maybe you could. You have the gift of speechmaking, and I never courted a girl in my life." He hung his head sheepishly.

The captain glared at him. "What do you want to marry for if you're scairt of wimmen?" he demanded. "You keep out of it, Leander."

"I wish I could," sighed Leander, "but, honest, Dan, I ought to get married. And besides it might be well for the business. Next year I could buy a real motor bus, and that means success for me."

"What does she say about it?" The captain eyed him with disfavor. This cold-blooded financial attitude did not appeal to a man who had remained single for the love of one woman.

"I haven't said anything to her—not a word. But she's been in the bus sometimes, and she's a pleasant little body. If you could put it to her—then I could do the rest—"

"Fool," sneered the captain angrily. "I'll see her. What feather-headed girl do you want me to ask?"

"She's no featherhead, Dan. She's sensible. I'm talking about Lucy Wayne. Will you do it, or won't you?" He climbed into the little car. Then climbed out again and cranked it; climbed in again and lighted a pipe, and all this while Captain Dan had not answered. He had stood there leaning on the gate, his lips clamped grimly about the stem of his pipe, his blue eyes far away and unseeing.

"What say?" Leander was impatient.

"I'll do it, Leander," promised the captain, his gaze flickering back to Leander, and then away to the horizon again. "She shall have a chance."

"That's what I thought," murmured Leander, smugly. "It's a box of cigars for you, Dan, afterward," he promised over his shoulder.

"Excuse me!" ejaculated the captain as the car rattled away. Many minutes he stood there, his thoughts busy with his past in which Lucy Wayne had a part, and even now with their gardens adjoining they did little more than pass the time of day when they met.

A voice suddenly cut the silence of the afternoon.

"Why don't you come and give me Leander Hutchins' message?" asked the low, pleasant tones of Lucy, who was leaning over the snow-dusted hedge between their yards. She was fair and fresh looking, with big brown eyes that were inclined to be mischievous, and a sweet little face that refused to grow old as the years fled over her bonny brown head. "I want to hear what he had to say."

The captain came to the hedge. "Lucy, he wants to marry you," he announced abruptly.

"Oh!" Lucy was really surprised. "I thought perhaps he wanted to borrow money to go into the automobile business."

"I said I would ask you—I've done it," growled the captain, knocking out his pipe and putting it into the pocket of his blue pilot jacket. He was looking at her with hungry eyes; he looked lonely and wistful, standing there, asking her to marry another man.

Lucy was sorry for the lost years, too. She handed a little envelope over the hedge. "My answer to Leander is here—I heard his conversation with you—I was pruning my grapevines—so I wrote down the provisions under which I would marry Leander."

"You would—you might—marry him?" gasped the captain as she walked away toward her cozy little house. He knew there was a bright coal fire in the sitting-room grate, two cats would be on the rug, and perhaps Brownie, the spaniel—Lucy would be in there now, making some tea and preparing her supper while she considered Leander's proposal of marriage. He tore open the envelope and read the few pencilled lines over and over again:

"I agree to accept Leander's proposal, if Captain Dan does not ask me to forgive and forget, and if he does not ask me to marry him before nine o'clock tonight."

At last the truth smote the captain between his blue eyes and they lost their frost forever—something came into them that warmed them with the fire of youth. He leaped over the hedge and ran up the path, presenting himself at Lucy's door in breathless haste.

"I'll telephone Leander that you're going to marry me, and that we will be glad to lend him some money so that he can start a business," suggested the captain.

"That is just what I was thinking," agreed Lucy demurely, as she poure another cup of tea.

Importance of Learning to See.

The art of seeing is the foundation of a great many of our smaller accomplishments. Reading music is to a considerable extent learning to see. Learning to spell is learning to see. The good speller is one who knows words by sight. . . . I marvel, sometimes, that people who are fairly intelligent—people who are constant readers—should look into the faces of the commonest words of the language a thousand times a day, as they often do, and then, when they take a pen in their hands, always misspell them. If they had learned to see, they would not do it.—Washington Gladden.

Pocahontas in Confusion

By JANE OSBORN

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Polly Saunders had tortured her brown curls into two pugnacious pigtails that stood at right angles above each ear. For want of a dressing robe she wore a black academic gown that had been left hanging in the locker room of the college gymnasium by one of the seniors. Then she pulled one of the pigtails around the back of her head and one across the front, fastened them down by a hairpin here and there and struggled into the confines of a wig made of horsehair that was supposed to transform her into a full-blooded Indian. But it did not. For Polly's skin was of the pink-and-white variety that only looked fairer beneath the shadow of the straight black locks.

Polly was a sophomore in college and was about to make her debut on the college stage as Pocahontas in a play written by one of her classmates.

"Where's the make-up man?" she called from the curtained-off section of the locker room where she was making her hasty toilet.

"Make-up man! Why, there isn't any such animal," answered King James in a high treble from the next dressing room. "They only have a make-up man for big plays—not for little class plays like this. You're supposed to make yourself up."

This was distressing, especially as in the various make-up equipment of the several actors in the play there was nothing that would do in any way to transform Polly Saunders into a coppery Indian. She was the only Indian in the cast, as the play was laid in England at the time that Pocahontas went thither with John Rolfe; and even if it was a humorous little farce Pocahontas had to look real.

For a few moments Polly described wild circles through the dressing rooms of the gymnasium in search of something that would help her. Then she found a box containing dressing for tan shoes, both liquid and paste.

Did What She Could.

She hurried back to her little mirror on the wall and did what she could. She was praised. If not for her perfect make-up, at least for her resourcefulness. It was the mistake of the committee that she had not been told to get real Indian make-up.

It was Friday afternoon, and Polly had made arrangements to go home for the week-end, leaving college immediately after the performance, catching a six o'clock train and reaching home by eight or nine.

That is why it was especially distressing on returning to her dressing room at the close of a performance, at which the applause and appreciation had made up for forgotten lines and occasional slight embarrassment, to find that the Indian complexion, put on so easily with a brush and a bit of cotton, didn't come off so easily. Polly tried to wash it, but water did not budge it.

"It's not soluble in H2O," said the feminine John Rolfe, still in his pointed beard, assisting the Indian princess to the end. "You ought to have smeared cold cream on first. You ought to have known enough."

"But I didn't," wailed Polly. "I was so anxious to be ready in time I just put it on any way. And now how can I go home with a face like this?"

There wasn't even time to hurry back to the dormitory, for Polly had to catch the six o'clock train. But there was time for one of the members of the committee to go to the dormitory for a heavy veil, while Polly hurried out of Pocahontas' clothes into her own.

Polly did not take a seat in the parlor car, as she had been advised by her careful parents always to do, because she thought she would be less conspicuous in the day coach. The man at the ticket office had stared at her, and so had the conductor who helped her aboard, and later punched her ticket, and there was nothing of admiration in the stare. It was enough to convince her that even through the chiffon her reddish brown complexion with its coating of powder that she had daubed on in the gymnasium dressing room was striking and probably hideous.

She had chosen the small compartment seat at the end of one of the coaches, beside the brakeman's lantern. She sat with her face toward the window.

She looked timidly through her veil as passengers alighted at a station that day midway of the journey from college to her home, because she was fearful lest some one might seek to share her narrow seat. That was when she saw a tall masculine figure that made the color mount high under her tawny complexion. She was quite sure it was Dalton Drew. Dalton Drew was her brother's roommate in college, and she had met him when she was home on Christmas vacation.

The worst of it was that Dalton had told her the second time he met her that she was the prettiest girl he had ever known, and she had naively replied that she was glad he thought so, because she thought he was quite the best looking man she had "almost" ever seen. Now she knew she looked a fright, and she didn't want to spoil his impression.

She was aware, a few minutes later, of the fact that this same masculine figure had passed and then repassed her compartment. With her face averted toward the window she thought he looked for a few moments intently at her. She wore the same hat she had worn on that day they went skating together. He would probably recognize it.

Therefore, when Dalton had passed, she rose and went quickly to the car beyond, found another inconspicuous seat at the end of the next car and sat there. For an hour she rode in miserable fear lest Dalton Drew should find her, and breathed a sigh of relief when she alighted at her home town. But her relief lasted only until she saw that Dalton Drew had also alighted.

Then she fled, actually running around the station, and stood for a few minutes in the lea of the express office, saw Dalton Drew approaching, and fled again to the place where the waiting taxis stood and jumped into the first one that presented itself and gave her home address.

Some one hailed the cab. It was Dalton Drew running beside it, but she ordered the taxi driver to drive fast and not to stop. Then she was conscious that another taxi, probably with Dalton Drew within, was driving behind hers along the stretch of road that led to her fathers' suburban home.

Five minutes more and her taxi came to an abrupt stop. The taxi driver dismounted and the pursuing taxi stopped, too.

After a few moments of investigation the driver opened the door, told her "he was plumb out of gas," and then she was face to face with Dalton Drew, who fairly lifted her to his own waiting taxi, paid the driver of the disabled car and ordered his own driver to proceed.

"Now," he said—and Polly was very glad that it was quite dark in the taxi—"now will you tell me why you have been running away from me? I heard you were coming home, pestered your brother until he found out what train you were going to take," boarded it, discovered you and then realized that you were trying to escape me. Perhaps I ought to take it all as proof enough that you dislike me, that you don't want to have things go on where they left off at Christmas—but—well, I'm not so easily discouraged."

"I don't see what you mean," said Polly, averting her face.

"I mean that the way you have treated me only makes me more anxious to tell you that I'm mad about you, Polly Saunders. I didn't realize that you found me objectionable." Then Dalton Drew produced a pocket flash light from his pocket. "Don't turn from me that way, Polly. I want to see your face—"

The flash flared bright in Polly's face and Dalton leaned toward her.

Then Polly raised her veil. "I think you are perfectly horrid," she said. "Look at me, if you want to, and you'll never say again what you said last Christmas. Oh, Dalton," she said now, shedding real tears of self-pity, "I used brown shoe polish and it won't come off. There—there—wasn't a real make-up man, and I had to do something."

But before she had finished her explanation poor little Pocahontas let her tawny face rest on Dalton Drew's shoulder.

"If it never came off, I'd love you just the same," he assured her.

First President's Cabinet.

The Constitution of the United States made no provision for the creation of executive departments, vesting the sole executive power in the President. These departments were created by successive acts of congress under authority conferred by the constitution in article 1, section 8, paragraph 18. The departments of State, then called foreign affairs, Treasury and War were established by the first session of the first congress. The secretaries of these, together with the attorney general, who was then a part of the judicial establishment, formed the first President's cabinet.

Albert Lee, the two-weeks-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hartshaw, colored, 450 S. Oakley avenue, was burned to death shortly before noon Saturday when fire destroyed the upper floor of their home.

A gas heating stove, which Mrs. Hartshaw was using to dry clothes, exploded, catching on fire the cot where the baby was lying. The mother had been ill with pneumonia. She escaped to the top of the stairs where she fainted. Firemen rescued her later, but the baby was suffocated. Damages are estimated at $400.

Hilltop Athletic Club Picnic and Flag Raising Decoration Day Surprise by Orebaugh

W. H. Orebaugh has promised the Special Entertainment Committee a big surprise. Nobody knows what it is but Orebaugh. The old boy has something up his sleeve again. He says it will be of interest to Club Members, their wives and children, as well as invited guests, so every member and their friends arrange to attend this picnic and find out what the surprise is.

The Special Entertainment Committee has arranged for the following amusements: Horse-shoe pitching contest, races of all kinds for young and old, croquet games and tennis, peanut races, sack races, thimble races, needle races, nail driving contests for women and children and many other games and amusements which we cannot mention at present time, but there will not be an idle moment from 9 A. M. in the morning until dark.

To settle a long standing debate as to who is the best pitcher Harry Butler, our youthful real estate man, or L. M. Seiller, our retired dry-goods merchant, a baseball game has been arranged for with the two characters named above as opposing pitchers. Nine umpires will be used, but from the way it looks, we will need more. Butler practices every afternoon in the back of the Bank building and is getting control down to a nat's heel. Seiller says he does not need any practice. All he needs is a first class catcher as he will strike out all opposing players in one-two-three order. At any rate, we will see May 30th at 3 P. M.

IT WILL BE A BIG DAY—From 9 o'clock in the morning until midnight, something doing every minute.

By the way, we forgot to mention that Officer Dolby will be the chief umpire to settle all disputes between the other umpires. We have asked the State of Ohio for the State militia in case of a riot over the ball game.

FREE LEMONADE, PEANUTS, HOT COFFEE.—Bring your baskets well filled with lots of good things to eat. If you come by auto, go east on Main Street to the Bries Road, turn south till you see the sign, Hilltop Athletic Club Summer House and turn into the grounds. If you come by Interurban car, get off at Kenasington stop and walk south to the grounds, which is not more than three squares.

The Special Entertainment Committee has arranged for an elephant from Ringling Brothers Circus to help entertain during the day. There will be swings and sand piles for the children to play in, so come prepared for the biggest time of your life.

Again we must mention the surprise of Mr. Orebaugh which is looked forward to by all club members and their friends. In case of rain, there will be plenty of shelter, so don't let that keep you away. Remember the day, Tuesday, May 30th, Decoration Day.

BOYS INJURED

Three boys have been injured by being hit by automobiles on the Hilltop this week. On Monday morning John Michaelis, six-year-old son of Mrs. L. N. Michaelis, 37 S. Wheatland, walked out between two machines in front of the Carlile & Kerr Hilltop store and not noticing the approaching machine of Mr. Frazell, of Ridge ave., and was hit and knocked down, the machine passing over him but the wheels not touching him. He was taken home and medical aid summoned but outside of several bruises he was fortunately not seriously hurt. The machine was not going fast.

On Tuesday evening James Houston, six-year-old son of Mrs. James Houston of Holly, Colorado, who is visiting at the home of Mrs. Poullon, on S. Harris avenue, while running into the street, was struck by a machine driven by Mr. Jess Edgington and knocked down, receiving a severe scalp wound besides other bruises. He was taken to Mt. Carmel Hospital, and appears to be getting along very well. Had the machine been going at a fast speed the boy would probably have been killed, but the machine was going very slow at the time.

Ralston Westlake, age 14 years, son of Councilman Westlake, while alighting from a West Broad street car near Lechner avenue, was struck by a passing machine, and run over, causing bones on left ankle to be broken in two places. The car had stopped, and another machine had stopped near the curb line, while a touring car driven by a stranger wedged in between the street car and other machine, hitting Ralston as he alighted from the front end of the car. He was taken to Mt. Carmel hospital.

WOULD HARNESS HEAT OF KILAUEA

Borings in Volcano Suggested to See If It Can Be Converted Into Power.

EXPERTS SEE POSSIBILITIES

Tentative Plans for the Experiment Embrace at Least 50 Borings to Provide Thermal Map of Hot Belt of Volcano.

Honolulu.—An immediate start on experimental borings in the bed of the active volcano of Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, to determine whether the heat of the volcano can be harnessed and converted into electrical power, was urged by Dr. T. A. Jaggar, director of the Volcano observatory, at the annual meeting of the Volcano Research association here.

Doctor Jaggar said that tentative plans for the experiment embraced at least 50 borings so located as to provide a thermal map of the hot belt of the volcano. The first boring would be sunk to a depth of 200 or 300 feet in the center of the crater, with the others at 50 to 100 feet deep, depending upon the nature of the resultant discoveries.

Borings in Lava Beds.

Most of these borings will be made at the source of old lava flows.

The meeting, commemorative of the tenth anniversary of the founding of the research association, decided that the borings should not be made until subscriptions totaling $8,000 had been obtained to defray the expenses. Of this sum $7,000 already has been donated.

Doctor Jaggar also recommended the construction of a practicable pack trail to the summit of Mauna Loa, 14,000 feet above sea level. Kilauea is situated 4,000 feet above sea level, on the slopes of Mauna Loa. Doctor Jaggar said that he expected a summit outbreak of Mauna Loa, in the crater of Mokuaweoweo, next year, or in the year 1924, as nine years will have lapsed then since Mauna Loa's last activity.

Wants House for Scientists.

He also urged the construction of a house at the summit in order that scientists might be quartered there in anticipation of this outbreak, as nobody has been known to have witnessed the first stages of one of Mauna Loa's activities.

Previously attention has always been attracted to the outbreak at the summit by the reflection in the clouds above of the glow of the boiling fire fountains which had risen through the summit crater. The board of directors indorsed this suggestion.

Doctor Jaggar's report reviewed the work of the research station on the brink of Kilauea volcano and the activities of the association.

TAKES MAN'S LEG FOR BOARD

Landlady Steals Artificial Limb of Joseph Bonarsky When Bill Runs Too High.

Philadelphia.—A wooden leg, an irate landlady and a board bill of $24 caused Joseph Bonarsky, the boarder who "forgot" to pay, to hobble into the Second and Christian street police station, using a frayed broom as a crutch. He told the desk sergeant that his landlady, Mrs. Julia Snyder, of 835 South Front street, had taken his wooden leg from him while he slept. He demanded its return.

"She took it," Joseph said, "as security for a board bill. The leg cost me $150. And I bid $10 in it before I went to bed."

Police were sent to bring Mrs. Snyder and the leg to the station house.

"He owes me $24 for three months' room and board. "I only took the leg for security," she said.

Joseph finally unraveled paper and silver money from various parts of his clothing and upon giving this to Mrs. Snyder he received his leg.

NEWBORN DANGER IN YELLOW FEVER

May Cross Ocean in Event of Quick Transit Between American and African Tropics.

GORGAS' WARNING RECALLED

In Former Days Time of Transit Across Atlantic Was Long Enough to Allow all Cases of Fever on Board to Kill or Cure.

Panama.—The two Portuguese aviators flying across the Atlantic from Africa to South America brings to mind a prophetic warning of the late General Gorgas. This was to the effect that when quick transportation between tropical Africa and tropical America should develop, as it eventually would, it would greatly increase the danger of the spread of yellow fever to the Eastern Hemisphere as long as the disease remained in South America, especially in Brazil.

Days of the Slave Trade.

The reason why yellow fever did not spread from America to Africa in the days of the slave trade, as malaria did spread from Africa to America then, illutrates beautifully an important difference between the two great tropical plagues, as well as gives point and pertinence to General Gorgas' warning. Yellow fever kills or cures in a very short time; malaria may linger in the system for a very long time. In former days the time of transit across the Atlantic was long enough to allow all cases of yellow fever on board a ship to die or to recover before the voyage ended. Recovery conferred immunity on the fortunate, and if a mosquito should bite them after they reached Africa they found no germs in them to transmit to others. So it required a very quick transit to get the infection across. It is not yet positively certain that yellow fever ever did cross the ocean. General Gorgas was on his way to the west coast of Africa to settle this question definitely when he died in London.

An Important Difference.

But malaria, which seems to have originated in Africa, does not confer immunity upon those who recover from an attack. The germs may survive in the system of the sufferer for months, or even for years, in a more or less dormant state, even if acute attacks do not again develop, and these germs may infect the anopheles or malaria-carrying mosquitoes, and so enable them to infect others. In this way the African slaves brought malaria to America with them, but the slave traders did not carry back yellow fever with them to Africa—at least it is not definitely known that they did—and the long time of transit was unfavorable to any considerable transportation of the infection. It is certain that Africa has not suffered from the imported American plague of yellow fever as much as America has from the malaria, imported from Africa.

Airplane May Change This.

But the airplane may easily change all this. If the Atlantic is crossed in two or three days any member of the crew of an airplane having an infection of yellow fever may easily carry the disease to where the mosquitoes are waiting to do their part on both sides of the Atlantic. Yellow fever does not reveal itself immediately after a man is bitten by an infected mosquito.

The only safety would lie in a strict quarantine at the port of arrival in Africa or Europe, the crew and passengers all being detained under watch until the period of inoculation has passed. The other remedy is to clean up South America of yellow fever, as General Gorgas so strongly urged.

The setting for the tale is La Jolla, a small town near San Diego. It is a place that boasts of great swimming and many other attractions, besides a museum. A little maiden, whom we will call Nellie, was passing the museum with her mother. Both were newcomers in the town, and were taking their first sight-seeing tour. Nellie glanced up at the sign in front of the museum: "Man-eating shark. Fifteen cents admission." So the two passed on. Two or three hours later mother and daughter came back by the same route, and again passed the museum. The sign, of course was still there. Nellie could not be silenced. "Is that man still eating the shark?" she asked. "I should think he would get tired."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

The Winning Drawback

By CORONA REMINGTON

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

At night he worked over it, put the pieces together, took them apart again and tried it all over. Katherine would express some of the things he felt but could not say. As he worked his thoughts were continuously upon her, and there was always a feeling of awe and almost fear mingled with his love. She was so exquisite, so dainty and so petted and well bred. Often he wondered why she ever tolerated an ordinary chap like himself—she who could have had the friendship and admiration of any man she chose.

At last his little masterpiece was finished. It looked like a tiny hanging wigwam with a little door in one side, a success even beyond his hopes; yet, once finished, he began to get stage fright about presenting it to her. What should he say, what would she do when she saw it? After all, it couldn't mean much to her who could have anything under the sun she wanted.

The first time he called after it was finished he started to take it over, but at the last moment lost all courage, and lifting the thing out of the machine, carried it back and hung it on the hook where it had lived during its days of incompletion.

"I—I made something for you," he told Professor Conrad's daughter as soon as they were seated, "but at the last moment lost my nerve and didn't bring it."

"Oh, how dear of you!" she exclaimed warmly, "but why did you lose your nerve?"

"I—I don't know—you're so feted and petted somehow, it seemed silly after all, but I did enjoy making it and thinking about you while I worked at it after office hours.

"Oh Fred, I'm just dying to see it. Please, please go get it; it won't take many minutes, or I'll not sleep tonight wondering what it is."

He was rather glad—it would be good to have it over. Hurrying out, he jumped into his little sedan and sped away. In a jiffy he was back.

"I—I thought maybe you'd like it," he said, half apologetically, standing in the doorway and holding his gift at arm's length for her inspection.

Transferred the Little Songster.

"Oh," she gasped with delight, "a little cage for Pete. How darling of you." The man flushed with pleasure. "Nothing could have made me happier. How quaint and foreign it looks. Did you really make it yourself?"

"Uh-huh," Fred Boatright nodded.

"And think of the time and work you've put on it, and you so busy, too. It was lovely of you, Fred."

"I'm awfully glad you like it?" he smiled regaining his composure. "Shall we see how Pete takes to it?"

Together they transferred the sleepy little songster to his new home and for the rest of the evening Fred was in heaven. Once he almost said the thing that had been on the tip of his tongue for weeks, but at the last moment his courage failed. He was just an ordinary fellow starting out to be a lawyer, and she with generations of cultured ancestors behind her and money enough to buy a dozen skyscrapers. It was taking an unfair advantage, she had never even met his family. What would she think of his mother? Sweet soul that she was, he loved her and was proud of her, but how would Katherine feel when she hear "you was" and "it don't"? Little things that jarred on his nerves even although he would have died rather than let his mother know it.

Weeks passed. Katherine remained as friendly and natural and lovable as ever, but Boatright could not quite get up the necessary courage and every hour he was paralyzed with the fear that some one would get ahead of him.

One morning some time later the phone on his desk jingled sharply.

"This is Katherine," sang the voice over the wire. "Can you come over to lunch, Fred? I want to ask you something."

"I'd love to," he replied.

"All right; try to come a little early, so we can talk before they serve."

Puzzled, but inordinately happy, Fred hurried through his dictation and reached the Conrad home nearly an hour ahead of time.

"Awfully kind of you to ask me over," he said, almost crushing her hand in his.

"Awfully nice to have you." Katherine smiled. "Let's sit here," she suggested, motioning toward the window seat. "Now," continued the girl, "I want to show you what I found. She unfolded a bit of paper all written over in pencil. It was lying on the floor after you left last time, and I couldn't help reading it."

Fred glanced quickly at it and flushed.

"Yes, it's mine," he admitted.

"I thought it was your writing, but—but—"

"I always jot down . . . ie interesting things that happen at the office or during the day and slip them in my weekly letter to mother. She's all alone, and everything interests her."

"How sweet of you, Fred," the girl exclaimed, impulsively. "She must adore her big son."

"I—I love her," he confessed, simply.

"But what puzzled me was—it isn't written as you usually write."

"You mean the English and all doesn't seem—very educated?"

"Y-e-s."

"My mother is—well, I'm proud of her and I love her, and I wouldn't change a thing if I could, but she didn't have all the educational advantages I had, and I'm not going to have her feeling inferior to her own son, so in my weekly letters I drop into her way of writing and thinking just as nearly as I can."

It was over—red and fidgeting he sat waiting for the girl to speak. At last after an endless time he looked up and saw tears in her soft gray eyes.

"Oh, Fred I love you for that and I think you're the most wonderful man in the whole world."

"You—you mean you don't mind?" he asked incredulously.

"Why, of course not, dear. Did you really think I would?"

To this day Fred doesn't know how it happened or what he said, but a second later Katherine was crying softly in his arms and murmuring all sorts of things about wonderful and adorable, and when they went in to lunch everybody knew that they were engaged.

If you love animals you will be interested in a few stories which history has preserved for us. You are at once on the side of the pet white doe at which Louis the XV fired just for fun. The poor creature came wounded toward him and licked his hand, but the king drove the animal away from him and shot it repeatedly until it died.

But there were other monarchs who really loved their pets, observes "O'Dair" in the Milwaukee Sentinel. Marie Louise, the wife of Charles II of Spain, had two parrots who talked French and who were her constant companions. Queen Victoria on her deathbed sent for her favorite pet, a Pomeranian dog named Marco. And after the headsman had done his work it appeared that the favorite dog of Mary, Queen of Scots, had followed his mistress and was concealed under her clothing. When it was discovered it gave a short cry and seated itself between the head and the neck, from which the blood was still flowing.

Henry I formed an extensive menagerie at Woodstock. "The king craved from other kings lions, leopards, lynxes and camels and other curious beasts of which England had none. Among others was a strange animal called a stryx sent him by William of Montpelier, which beast he said was among the Africans counted as a kind of hedgehog covered with pricking bristles, which shoot out naturally on the dogs that pursue them."

The story goes that Charles XII of Sweden when only seven years old was accidentally bitten by a dog to which he was feeding a piece of bread. But the young prince, refusing to betray his pet, kept the matter to himself until an officer saw that he had grown pale with pain and loss of blood.

Mrs. Martha Ellen Huston was born at Sharon, Ohio, April 23, 1858, the daughter of Mr. John M. and Elizabeth Parish Boggs. Her father was a staunch member of the Presbyterian church, leader in the church choir for many years and a blacksmith by trade. Thus in early training Mrs. Huston received impressions which never left her to the end. She received her schooling at Sharon and joined the Presbyterian church at an early age.

She was married to L. M. Huston at Sharon, July 10, 1880. They made their home at Sharon and later at Chandlersville, Ohio, and from thence they moved to Columbus, Ohio, where they lived for the past twelve years.

Mrs. Huston was a home-loving woman, caring more for her family than for any entrance into life's affairs. She was kept very busy with nine children. She was of a retiring disposition which seems to have been a family trait. Unassuming in her way, she was deeply in earnest in her religious life and was a regular attendant at services until they moved to Columbus when her household duties kept her much of the time at home. Those who knew her intimately loved her for her kindly spirit and her utter devotion to her husband and children. She was as has been said of her a "slave to her home," and no higher compliment need be paid such a devoted soul. She was a great suffer-r for two long years. Within the last month she had to take to her bed and due to complications she passed to her eternal reward at four o'clock on Thursday afternoon, May 18. She leaves besides her devoted husband, nine children. Burial Saturday at Union Cemetary by C. J. Kohn.

Mrs. Lena Almeda Palmer, 54, wife of D. R. Palmer, and sister-in-law of Dr. S. S. Palmer, pastor of the Broad Street Presbyterian Church, died of complications at her home in Westerville, Monday. She had been an invalid for two years.

Mrs. Paumer leaves her husband, two sons, B. B. Palmer, at home, and Cecil Palmer of Columbus; two daughters, Miss Helen Palmer also at home and Mrs. J. O. Jenkins of Columbus.

Mrs. Palmer was a former Hilltop resident and was well known here.

Mrs. Ida Cook, 52, colored, wife of J. S. Cook, died from complications last Friday night at her home, rear 235 Clarendon avenue. She leaves her husband, two daughters, two sons, five brothers, and four sisters. Burial in Green Lawn.

Robert Nicholas Martin, 10 days, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Martin, 215 South Harris avenue, died Sunday at the home of his parents. He leaves his parents, two brothers and two sisters. Funeral was Tuesday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn.

James Topsail, 3, colored, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Topsail, died from pneumonia last Saturday at the home of his parents, 229 South Oakley avenue. He leaves his parents and grandmother. Funeral was Tuesday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn.

Mrs. Anna B. Dowden, 48, 2200 Sullivant ave., died from complications on Wednesday at the Columbus Radium Hospital. She leaves her husband and one daughter.

"ANGEL" BUYS VILLAGE

Swedish Red Cross Nurse Seeks to Rehabilitate War Wrecks.

Aristocratic Girl Gathers German Refugees From Wastes of Siberia—Has Already Repatriated Thousands of War Prisoners.

Stockholm.—A refuge of rest and physical rehabilitation where the human wrecks of German war prisoners from Russia and Siberia may be treated and salvaged is being purchased by Miss Elsa Brandstrom, known throughout central Europe and Russia as "the angel of Siberia."

Miss Brandstrom is negotiating for a village in southern Germany which she proposes to turn into a human reclamation camp for the derelicts that once marched proudly under Hindenburg and other Teutonic military leaders against the Russians and were captured and sent to Siberian concentration camps.

They remained in Siberia till long after the world war was over, and there are still thousands of them left, free to return home if they could. But they have neither the means nor the physical strength to do so.

Miss Brandstrom is a young Swedish Red Cross nurse, the daughter of the late Gen. Edward Brandstrom, for many years Swedish minister to Russia under the czar's regime. Leaving her comfortable home in Stockholm and the aristocratic social set in which she had been brought up, she led a small Red Cross expedition into western Siberia and has succeeded in repatriating thousands of German and Austrian war prisoners.

But she found that when the former soldiers reached their homes they were unable to assume their former places in society. They were wrecks.

So she has collected a considerable fund and hopes to purchase a village and have it ready for occupancy this autumn.

As to the war prisoners still wandering about Russia and Siberia, many of them never will be found, and none of them will ever be able to get back without outside aid. Miss Brandstrom proposes to continue rounding up these waifs and bringing them to her haven of rest.

TELLS OF POLAND'S EFFORTS

Finance Minister Urges Patience and Consideration in Rebuilding Process.

Warsaw.—Poland's struggle to refund her foreign debt, amounting to nearly $285,000,000 at the beginning of this year, is recounted at length in the first complete budget of the republic, presented to parliament by Minister of Finance Michalski.

Minister Michalski points out the slow but consistent progress Poland has made from the beginning in all affairs of government. After sketching the plans for the immediate future intended to hasten that progress, he appealed to the nation for patience and consideration.

"It is one of the Polish characteristics that we should like to build up Poland within one year," he said. "But this is practically impossible."

DREAD PELLAGRA FOUND CURABLE

Proper Quantities of Animal Protein in Diet Both Cure and Preventive.

TAKES HEAVY TOLL OF LIFE

Scientists of United States Public Health Service Give Results of Many Years' Study of Disease —Need Eggs and Meat.

Pellagra, a mysterious disease which has caused widespread illness and taken a heavy toll of life in the United States and many countries of Europe, is caused primarily by lack of animal protein in the diet, and is both preventable and curable by proper quantities of animal protein being included in the diet, it is announced by the United States public health service. Doctors Goldberger and Tanner, surgeon and past assistant surgeon, respectively, reporting the results of many years' study of the disease, assert that forty grams per day of beef or milk proteins in the diet will, for practically all normal individuals, prevent the contraction of pellagra. The necessary forty grams of animal protein are contained in about a half pound of beef, or three pints of milk.

Must Get Enough.

"Thus it does not suffice," says the report, "merely to include milk or meat in a diet to prevent pellagra. The quantity of either of these or of other like foods, alone or as supplements, must be considerable to be effective. This may help to explain some of the instances of pellagra in individuals, (including some of those very rare ones in nursing infants), who are alleged to have had a 'good' diet. They did not consume enough for their particular needs."

The following selected quotations set forth the logic of the situation as expressed by Goldberger and Tanner:

"There is now at hand a considerable and convincing body of evidence in support of the view that diet is the primary controlling factor in the prevention and causation of pellagra."

"To begin with, account must be taken of the fact that no unequivocal evidence of the transmissibility of the disease has yet been adduced."

"Of outstanding significance are, on the one hand, the demonstration that pellagra may be completely prevented by means of a suitable diet, without intervention of any other known factor, hygienic or sanitary, and, on the other, the absence of any sound evidence that the disease is preventable by any other means."

Referring to experimental work on a group of convicts, the report states, "At least 6 of 11 convicts who volunteered for the experiment and who subsisted on a diet consisting principally of the cereals wheat, maize, and rice, with pork fat and some fresh vegetables (sweet potatoes, turnips, cabbage, greens), developed evidence which experienced observers recognized as that of pellagra; whereas, of a large number of controls, none presented any evidence justifying even a suspicion of the disease.

The Protein Factor.

"Thus, by a process of exclusion we are led to conclude that of the known dietary essentials the protein factor alone was concerned in our failure to prevent the development of the cases herein cited. And if our interpretations are, as we believe, sound, (and if all dietary factors essential in human nutrition are known) the further conclusion may properly be drawn, namely, that the dominating role of diet in the prevention and causation of pellagra must be referred primarily to the character of the protein supply.

"Some of the perplexity and confusion will also be prevented if it is not forgotten that the biological quality of a protein and its adequacy in relation to pellagra may, and doubtless frequently do, depend on the plane of intake. In our experience, a supplement of not over 40 grams of milk or beef proteins will, for practically all normal individuals, adequately supplement a pellagra-producing mixture of proteins from maize, wheat, rice, and cowpeas, but 20 grams (representing somewhat over a pint of milk or a quarter of a pound of round steak) may not do so."

INSECTS USE RADIO

Wireless Expert Discovers Electric Power in Bugs.

Cockroach Has Wave Length of Between One-Half Inch and One Inch —Send Messages to Each Other—Accidentally Discovered.

Harrisburg, Pa.—The troublesome cockroach is a radio "fan" and communicates by wireless with his brothers and sisters.

Howard Zimmerman of Harrisburg, sergeant major of the Fifty-third infantry brigade headquarters company, Pennsylvania National Guard, believes and seeks to prove it through experiments, the results of which were made public here.

The experiments, Sergeant Zimmerman said, have been under way here for a year as the results of an investigation begun in a bug-infested barracks in Luxemberg, under the direction of Captain Armstrong of the Fifth division signal corps with which Sergeant Zimmerman was serving shortly after the armistice.

"At that time we were having night school and were working on the shortest possible wave length, getting as low as one-fourth of a meter," the sergeant explained. "Radio sets were located three feet apart on a glass-topped table.

"One night everything was working perfectly when suddenly our tubes began to act queerly. By the flickering light of the candle we finally located 'Mr. Cockroach' sitting in the space between the receiving and transmitting apparatus. We removed him and, to our surprise, the apparatus became normal. This led us to believe he was capable of making electric power."

The sergeant declared one insect radios to another, and this belief, he said, is supported by his experiments.

"I have found in my experimental work," he asserted, "that a cockroach has a wave length of between one-half inch and one inch, with a very low frequency."

The tumble bug and moth are also endowed with radio power, he added, while beetles show only slight evidence of possessing wireless habits.

UNIQUE MEMORIAL

In an upper window of one of the well-to-do houses of Cologne, Germany, is an astonishing memorial, a pair of horses' heads, facing the street.

They were carved hundreds of years ago and were placed there to commemorate one of the quaintest events in all history, by an ancient noble of the city.

The story runs that his wife died, and while he was mourning at the deathbed, his stable man ran to him and told him that his wife's horses had disappeared. When he went down to their stalls he saw that they were gone, but when he turned back to the house he saw them emerging from the death chamber and concluded that they were bringing his wife's soul to heaven. The horses were never found again, and this strange memorial was set up here in their honor.

PULLS TOOTH TO TOOT FLUTE

Schoolboy Sacrifices Crooked Incisor to Further Life's Ambition to Become a Musician.

Philadelphia.—A real martyr to music has been brought to light by Miss Winnetta L. Stacks, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Deaconess home here. Miss Stacks in describing her efforts to initiate music classes in settlement work, told of one small boy who confided that his life's ambition was to play the flute. The teacher struggled in vain to teach, but his lips would not pucker right.

"Joe, I guess you will never learn to blow a flute because of the way that front tooth has grown. It is in the way," she said finally.

A few days later the lad's mother returned home to find her son's face bloody, but shining with triumph. He had borrowed pliers and had pulled the tooth.

"And at the first recital of the students of the class," Miss Stacks concluded, "he blew notes on the flute."

Surgeon Cuts Extra Head Off of Boy Born With Two

Brussels.—A report is being made to the Belgian Academy of Medicine of a remarkable surgical operation performed by Chief Surgeon Gianolia at the Jumet hospital in the village of Tergnier, when an abnormal secondary head on a boy born a week ago was successfully amputated. The remaining head of the boy is normal. The one removed was larger and malformed.

FUR SEALS GO NORTH

Migration Begins for Rendezvous in the Bering Sea.

Herd Leaves South Pacific Waters and Follows the Western Coasts of United States, British Columbia and Alaska.

Port Angeles, Wash.—The Pacific fur seal herd is on the move.

The annual migration to the northward has begun, and the vanguard soon will appear off the coasts of Washington and British Columbia, leading the way to the summer rendezvous on the Pribiloff islands in the middle of Bering sea.

All winter long the seals have been scattered through the South Pacific, but as spring approaches the mating instinct turns their heads to the North and they converge toward the California coast and then follow their time-worn groove along the western coasts of the United States, British Columbia and Alaska, the milestones of their route being the deep sea fishing banks, where succulent salmon, halibut and other fish keep them sleek and fat.

Few, if any, other animals are so carefully pampered and nursed by Uncle Sam, and except for such fostering the fur seal probably now would be an extinct animal. With the exception of a small colony that summers on the Commander islands, off the coast of Kamchatka, Siberia, the herd which propagates on the Pribilofs is the only fur seal herd known to be in existence.

When Alaska was purchased from Russia, the seals on the Pribilof islands numbered, according to various official estimates, from two to five million animals, but due to ruthless operations by sealers of many nations the herds were decimated annually. The United States government, year after year, endeavored to negotiate treaties for the protection of the seals and in 1891 a measure of success was obtained in a treaty with Great Britain which practically eliminated Canadian sealers.

The massacre of the herds continued, however. Numerous schooners flying the Japanese flag annually reaped a rich harvest, and the Japanese government steadfastly refused to interfere with the enterprise. Finally, in 1911, when the herds by unrestrained pelagic sealing had been reduced to approximately 250,000 animals, the efforts of the United States were rewarded and a treaty among four nations—Russia, Great Britain, Japan and the United States—was negotiated, to continue in force for 15 years.

This agreement prohibited any of the nationals of the signatory powers from taking seals at any time anywhere, with the provision, however, that agents of the United States might take a few thousand skins each year from bachelor males summering on the Pribilofs. This does not interfere with the propagation of the herds. By the terms of the treaty the United States not only amply rewarded the nations for any loss sustained by their nationals, but agreed to give annually 15 per cent of the proceeds of the skins taken from the few animals killed.

The Broken Compact

By ELIZABETH R. GREENE

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

Shadrach stared disconsolately at the uncleared breakfast table.

He was sick of doing dishes; yes, sir, sick of it. Why in tunket he'd made that fool compact with Jerry—

The door opened and Jerry himself came in.

"Ain't that teakettle hot yet?" he demanded, jerking off the stove-cover. "I anum, if you ain't got there an' let the fire go out, Shadrach Hull!"

"I can't do everything t' once!" snapped the long-suffering Shadrach. "There's work enough in this house for ten men an' a boy," he growled.

Captain Jerry chuckled as he restored the fire.

"Well, you had your choice, Shad," he answered. "If you're gettin' tuckered out, we can swap 'round a spell—"

"Humph! Let you know 'bout housework an' cookin' an—an takin' care o' hens."

The teakettle was steaming now and Jerry snatched it up.

"What you cal'latin' on havin' for supper, Shad?" he asked suspiciously, pausing at the door.

"Dunno," replied his partner above the tumult in the dish-pan. "Why?"

"Beans would go durn good," suggested Jerry mildly. "S'pose—"

"No, I couldn't!" promptly. "You won't eat 'em when I cook 'em, Jerry Webb, an' I ain't goin' t' do all that work for the hens—I swan I ain't."

The Captain smothered a sigh as he stepped out into the frosty February air. Life with Shadrach had its drawbacks, but it was better than living alone. Jerry's friendly heart was not meant for solitude nor dis-

"What in Tunket's th' Matter?"

content, but there were times when he did get "a-hankerin'" for Melissy and the joys of other days.

Melissy, as everyone knew, had been one of the best wives and housekeepers in Dustin and for twenty years Jerry had partaken of feasts fit for the gods. Then Melissy died and Jerry was left alone.

It was Shadrach who had come to the rescue with a proposal that had sounded plausible enough.

He, Shadrach, lived alone and the house was "a-plenty big" for Jerry "hung up his hat" there, too.

"You can't cook no more'n a baby, Jerry," Shadrach had expostulated. "Now, I'm used t' gettin' my victuals 'thout a woman fussin' 'round an' cookin' for one more—sho! for a man like me, it's a cinch, Jerry!"

It had proved a winning, if misleading, argument and Jerry had cast in his lot irrevocably with his boyhood chum.

To guard against desertion of the plan by either one, Shadrach had drawn up a compact in which he himself was to share half the living expenses, serve as cook, and, in short, relieve Jerry of the burden of household cares.

The Captain, on his part, was to "shoulder" the other half of the expenses, keep the pair provided with fish and keep himself immune from the wiles of scheming widows, especially the Widow Tripp.

Shadrach had deemed it wise to take this precaution with Jerry, for the Widow Tripp lived just across the road and you never can tell—

If Jerry rebelled at this clause of the compact, he gave no sign of it to the watchful Shadrach.

But this morning, as he walked to the shore, Jerry's contented mind, was it must be admitted, harboring revolt.

Shadrach had served one of his famous "odds and ends" breakfasts that morning, and it was only the hope that Miss Sally would be frying doughnuts that had kept the Captain's spirits up at all.

At the gate of a small cottage Jerry paused and sniffed the air expectantly.

"By Jupiter, she is!" he exulted. "I'd better see if she needs a pail of water. A woman oughtn't t' fry water. I never let Melissy."

Miss Sally's pails were empty, sure enough.

When they had been refilled and placed at the end of the kitchen sink, Jerry was proffered a plate of hot, sugared doughnuts.

"Jupiter!" he ejaculated, between enormous bites, "them beat th' Queen o' Sheba's!"

"Do eat all you can of 'em, Jerry," urged pleased Miss Sally. "I d'clare, I have hard work to get things et up. A body can't relish much settin' down alone—"

"No," agreed the Captain, sympathetically, "but there's wuss things, Sally," he sighed, thinking of the "odds and ends" breakfast.

Miss Sally, pouring beans into a shining brown beanpot, made no answer.

"I see you don't share Shadrach's grudge 'gainst beans," smiled Jerry.

"Grudge?"

"Yes. Shadrach won't bake beans—he's turrible set on it!"

Miss Sally, looking up, caught the wistfulness in the Captain's eyes.

"I d'clare," she said impulsively, "twould do my appetite good if you'd stop in them tonight on your way home and help me eat these up."

"D'you mean it?" gasped Jerry incredulously. "By gum, I'll come then," he promised, forgetting in his delight the hated compact.

* * * * * * *

The Captain trudged guiltily homewards in the early dusk. He had eaten a supper the like of which he hadn't tasted since the days of Melissy, but the joy of it was already fading. Conscience, like an avenging angel, was reminding him now of the broken compact.

"Hang that compact!" muttered Jerry. "I swan t' man I ain't goin' t' be tied t' it no longer. A woman like Sally Dakin don't grow on every bush—I'll tell Shad so tonight."

But as he neared the house the Captain's resolve grew rapidly weaker. Shadrach had been a good pal—it was going to be hard to break with him.

Jerry paused and wiped his puckered brow.

"You're in th' mess, Jeremiah Webb," he soliloquized grimly, "an' you can't git out o' it—hon'rable. You've got t' stan' by that fool compact."

When he opened the kitchen door, however, he stared in amazement at the scene before him.

Seated in the arm-chair by the fire sat Shadrach, one arm bandaged and a white cloth tied over one eye.

"Great Scott!" exclaimed Jerry. "What in tunket's th' matter?"

Shadrach squirmed uneasily. "Ice jumped up an' hit me when I was dumpin' th' ashes," he explained sheepishly.

"Humph! Hurt much?"

"Oh, no; only sprained my arm a little, an' got a few cinders in my eye. Where you been so long?" he added hastily.

It was Jerry's turn to look confused.

"Me?" he asked innocently. "Oh, I ain't hurried much. Who done up your arm?"

"Marthy. She see me fall an' come over."

"Marthy?" Jerry's bewilderment was superb.

"Yes, yes—Marthy Tripp. Don't stan' there gapin' so, Jerry. Get ready for supper."

"I—I ain't hungry," stammered his partner. "I—"

The door opened abruptly admitting the Widow Tripp.

She had brought over a second bowl of beans—for Jerry this time—and she had found the eye-stone for Shadrach.

The shameless Jerry sat down to his beans, grinning wickedly across the table to Shadrach behind the widow's back.

His partner fumbled with the bandage, pretending not to notice.

He protested faintly at the eye-stone, but 'twas useless. The widow had brought that eye-stone over to use—and use it she did, effectually, too; for the cinders came out of Shadrach's weeping orb.

At last, Shadrach and Jerry were alone in the kitchen.

"Reckon we best turn in, Jerry," said Shadrach. "I feel purty well shook up."

"Heart's th' wuss, aint it?"

"Don't be a fool, Jerry. Marthy Tripp's a wonder—I found that out today. Women like her don't grow on every bush—"

Jerry leaned forward confidingly. "That's what I thought tonight 'bout Sally Dakin," he said deliberately, "when I took supper with her an' busted th' compact."

As Shadrach received this astounding news in silence, Jerry added apologetically:

"Honest, 'twas 'fore I thought, Shad. I clean forgot the compact—"

"Humph!" Shadrach rose and limped over to the clock-shelf. When he returned, he held the compact in his hand. Before Jerry could speak, he had thrust it into the fire.

"Reckon that bloomin' thing's had its day," he remarked sheepishly.

"Shake!" cried Jerry heartily, "an' let's make it a double weddin', Pard!"

NEW YORK? IT'S IN THE ALPS

Swiss Peasant, Sending Telegram, Insists on It and Then Proves It.

Geneva, Switzerland.—A peasant handed in a telegram of a few words at a branch telegraph office for his wife in New York and placed a franc on the counter for payment.

The clerk asked whether the wire was really meant to be sent to New York and proceeded to make the calculation. When the comparatively large sum required was announced to the peasant, he protested loudly and insisted that New York was in Switzerland.

So it was found to be, but it took long and patient search through a large ancient volume to discover that there is a New York in Switzerland, an Alpine hamlet of fifty inhabitants not far from Lucerne.

Moss Ruins Wool.

Centralia, Wash.—Sheep came in for shearing from sheds on the ranges of Lincoln creek with a luxuriant growth of moss on their backs. During the winter the flocks were permitted the liberty of feeding in the open country. The wool became drenched in the misty rains and, mixed with the soil of the feeding pens, formed the basis for the formation of the moss. According to local buyers the sheep, so affected, cannot be sheared as the fleeces are so damaged as not to be worth the expense. The wool will be allowed to die and shed off as nature designed.

BIG ZEPPELIN FOR U. S.

German Company to Build Giant Airship for Government.

On This American Ship Germans Place All Their Hopes for Progress of German Science in Lighter-Than-Air Aviation.

Friedrichshafen.—The great hangar of the Zeppelin works at Friedrichshafen, now empty save for skeleton fragments of condemned aerial battleships, has been saved from destruction by the intervention of the United States. The company soon will begin to build a new airship for the United States government. This masterpiece is meant to prove, after the collapse of English and Italian airships bought by the United States, that lighter-than-air aviation under the guidance of German science, can be made safe and profitable.

The hangar, the only one remaining in Germany capable of constructing a Zeppelin of the largest type, stood long under condemnation. At one time the sentence was sealed and the Germans were instructed to proceed with the work of destruction. But they delayed, for they had inklings of a curious drama that was being played in Paris. It concerned compensation for the Zeppelins willfully destroyed by the Germans during the armistice, which were forfeit to the victorious powers. One of these was to have gone to the United States.

"We will accept money compensation for these ships," said the allies to Germany. "And now proceed to destroy your hangars. So that is settled."

"Not at all," was the word from America. "We have no use for money. We should like our compensation in kind. Germany shall build us a giant Zeppelin, bigger than the world has ever seen before."

The allies offered the usual assorted objections, but in the end the United States got approximately what it wanted and is to have a 70,000 cubic meter ship, about the size and design of the largest Zeppelin in use during the war.

On this American ship, and not on the much-advertised permission to begin general airship construction, the Germans place all their hopes for the progress of German science in lighter-than-air aviation. For the general permission to build is limited to machines of 30,000 cubic meters. These can remain 24 hours in the air with a small cargo of passengers, or two hours with a large cargo. But airship aviation to be commercially profitable, must transport large cargoes on flights of 24 hours or more. Hence, as the Germans point out, the allies' permission amounts to permission to build ships which cannot possibly compete with foreign airships, and hence which nobody will order. The single exception made in favor of America is the slender thread on which the future of German aviation hangs.

Scientists here are determined that this ship shall be so much better than anything ever built before that the world will decide it cannot afford to scrap the Zeppelin works.

Mrs. Rhoads Killed Last Sunday

Mrs. Esther Minthorn, 27, wife of Dr. Harry A. Minthorn, of 58 N. Twentieth street, and her mother, Mrs. Haley Rhoades, 60, wife of Frank Rhoades, of 210 S. Terrace street, were killed instantly last Sunday, when the Big Four Flyer, due at Union Station at 3:10 p. m., struck their machine at a crossing near Galloway, southwest of Columbus.

Visiting her family home, Mrs. Minthorn decided to take a ride in her father's machine and left home after dinner. Her mother accompanied her. They promised to return in an hour. Their husbands remained at the house. While driving, Mrs. Minthorn evidently failed to notice the approach of the passenger train which was late and was running at top speed. The accident happened at 3:14, four minutes after the train was due at the depot.

Bodies of the two women were hurled clear from the machine, that of Mrs. Minthorn alighting on the road bed midway between the wreckage and the roadway. The mother's body was thrown 50 feet ahead of the demolished auto, shoved 200 feet before the train stopped. The machine caught fire before trainmen reached it, and further delay was experienced until the entangled mass cooled off and could be pushed aside.

The body of Mrs. Minthorn was put aboard the train and taken to the Union Station, where the ambulance of the Edward E. Fisher Co., morticians, removed it to their morgue. Later the ambulance went to the scene for Mrs. Rhoades' body.

For four hours neither had been identified, but through efforts of Miss Nellie M. Bray, clerk in the state auto registrar's office, name of the machine owner, Frank Rhoades, was learned. At the home Mr. Rhoades and Dr. Minthorn completed identification.

The body of Mrs. Rhoades was mangled beyond recognition. Her head was crushed and she was otherwise mutilated. That of her daughter, Mrs. Minthorn, was mangled badly also. Her left arm was crushed, her left leg broken, skull fractured, chest crushed and her neck possibly broken.

Surviving Mrs. Rhoades are her husband and a daughter, Mrs. Hasel Vosper of Akron, a son, Harry, jr., aged 4, survives Mrs. Minthorn, besides her husband.

Double funeral services were held at the residence on Terrace avenue, Tuesday afternoon. Burial in Union cemetery.

Mr. D. B. Ulrey last Saturday delivered the commencement address to the High School at Sparta, Ohio, and Tuesday the Memorial address at Amanda, Ohio. Next Sunday he will give the K. of P. Memorial address at Johnstown, Ohio, and also on June 11th at the K. of P. Memorial services at East Liberty, Ohio.

The many friends of Mrs. John Walters of N. Terrace street, will be grieved to learn of her serious condition from a stroke of paralysis affecting the whole of her right side. She is slowly improving under the efficient care of Dr. Whitehead, and a nurse, with many faithful relatives. We are hoping for a speedy recovery.

CHINESE FILM STAR IS KILLED

Hero in Play Meets Death He Was Picturing for Villain of the Piece.

Soochow, China.—Keh, Lu, screen star with the Sin Yah Cinema company, who was playing the part of the hero in a new film, recently was overtaken by the death he was meeting out as punishment—in the film only—to the villain.

The hero chased the villain to the top of Lion hill, captured him on the bridge, threw him into the river and then, losing his balance, fell in himself and was drowned. The villain swam to safety.

Keh Lu's death was the first fatality in the comparatively new Chinese motion-picture industry.

The text is in Latin.

London Footman Kills Boy According to 14 Points

London.—A curious psychical problem is presented by Ernest Walker, seventeen years old, a footman, who has confessed to the murder of Charles Davis, a messenger boy. The murder was carried out according to fourteen points Walker had drawn up for himself.

He telephoned for a messenger, and then followed his plan, which was, in part: "2, wait at the front door; 3, invite him in; 4, bring him downstairs; 5, ask him to sit down; 6, hit him hard on the head and then tie him up; 7, put him in the safe; 8, keep him tied up; 9, at 10:30 o'clock torture; 11, prepare for the end."

Walker himself reported the murder to the police.

Memorial Services at Camp Chase Cemetery

The annual Memorial services at Camp Chase Confederate cemetery on Sullivant avenue, west of S. Hague, will be held next Saturday, June 3 at 2 o'clock, under the auspices of Robert E. Lee Chapter, U. D. C. This organization has held memorial services there continuously since 1901.

There are over 2200 graves of Confederate soldiers who died at Camp Chase during the Civil War. In 1885 Col. W. H. Knauss, a Union soldier, now deceased, cleared off the underbrush and obstacles from the burying ground and had erected the arch that now stands at the entrance to the cemetery. Himself, together with the late Al. G. Fields, have been faithful supporters and contributors in the keeping of this cemetery in good condition. Al. G. Fields is said to have been a Virginian and his original name was Al. G. Hatfield, but he himself dropped the "Hat" part of his name and was known as "Field."

Robert E. Lee Chapter are expecting to dedicate a bronze tablet in honor of Col. W. H. Knauss and Al. G. Field on Saturday, if sufficient preparations are successful. If such is done, Al G. Field Conrad, a grandson of Al. G. Field, and two granddaughters of Col. Knauss—Helen and Elizabeth Fletcher, daughters of O. W. Fletcher, the undertaker, will assist in the unveiling of the tablet. Two other grand children of Col. Knauss are expected to be present, Miss Catherine and Mr. Victor Gamble.

Anyone wishing to contribute suitable flowers can take them to the cemetery that day.

Judge Gregory of Louisville, Ky., will deliver the address and a quartet from the Al. G. Field Minstrels will sing. A firing squad and bugler from the Columbus Barracks will also assist in the services. Everybody is cordially invited to attend.

One Spring Morning

By SARAH C. CAREY

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

After a winter's illness I was recuperating among the hills of Vermont. It was the month of April. My friend, Nettie Perkins, and I were out watching an ice jam on the Connecticut, wandering down the river bank as far as the railroad bridge. Here the huge jam had piled about the piers until there was only a narrow channel left, through which the swollen current swirled and seethed in a manner that fascinated while it appalled.

As I stood there spellbound by the scene before me—all other sound deadened by the crash and boom of the great cakes as they packed and settled—Nettie shouted in my ear:

"Let's cross to the other side and call on Miss Martha Race."

"And who may Miss Martha Race be?" I asked half-heartedly, for I was loath to go calling on a glorious spring morning, with so much attraction out of doors.

"Oh, she is a dear old soul who had a romance in her youth and has lived alone in the old home ever since. She amuses herself by indulging in fads. Painting portraits is her latest one. See, that is her house, the last of those three," indicating with a wave of her hand three large colonial houses on the opposite side of the river.

Of course Miss Perkins had her way, and after consulting the watchman of the bridge concerning trains, we crossed and climbed the bank to the "House of Martha." We entered the old-fashioned garden at the rear and picked our way over little patches of snow through which dead stalks of hollyhock and dahlias appeared in a tangled mass.

"All this belongs to the Race estate," Miss Perkins explained, as we followed the uneven brick walk round to the front door. "The other two houses are occupied by strangers now, as Miss

Miss Martha Entered.

Martha is the only one left of the old family. That plateau on the other side of the road is called 'David Race's plain,' and the church at the far end of it was built and supported by Races for nearly a century." At this point in Race history Miss Perkins lifted the heavy brass knocker.

We were ushered in by a maid, whose appearance was strangely in keeping with a bygone age, to Miss Martha's presence. She was a quaint little lady whose transparent beauty and eighty years reminded one of a delicate piece of old china. Her soft gray eyes lighted for a moment as she bade us welcome, then settled again to an expression of quiet resignation.

At Nettie's suggestion I remained to rest while she accompanied Miss Martha to the studio to see some of her latest paintings, an arrangement which, suited me perfectly, as I was a bit weary after my long walk and its attendant excitement, and—yes, I must admit it—I wanted to study my quaint surroundings.

The morning sunlight flooded the big square room. From the deep-seated window I had an unobstructed view of David Race's plain and the low white church gleaming in the distance. Applewood logs smoldering in the wide fireplace gave out a pleasant, aromatic odor. The floor was covered with braided rugs, the gay coloring of which suggested the depletion of colonial wardrobes. Among the oil portraits of dead and gone Races I noticed here and there a face whose grotesque lines suggested a pathetic attempt at family resemblance. I judged these to be the work of Miss Martha. Over the mantel was a likeness of a young man whose keen brown eyes seemed to look out on a world of hope toward the fulfillment of years. I speculated upon his relationship, if any, to Miss Martha, and wondered why he was given this place of prominence among his elders.

I drew a chair in front of the fire and, sinking into its luxurious depths, gave myself up to the spell of my surroundings. A big yellow cat uncurled itself from the hassock at my feet and took possession of my lap, purring loudly in response to my gentle stroking.

"What a haven of rest and peace!" I thought. No noise of a turbulent river, no booming of ice jams penetrated here. Here was only the soft glow of the spring morning, the sizzling of the applewood logs, and the somnolent tick-tock of the tall clock on the stair landing throbbing through the pungent fragrance.

* * * * * * *

A rustle of soft silk and murmur of young voices mingled with laughter comes out of the stillness. The rooms are thronging with a gay party. Liveried servants stand at attention in the halls and doorways. Low carriages drawn by glossy-coated steeds are taking the guests to the white church at the far end of the plain. I search the moving throng for a familiar face, or someone to tell me the meaning of it all. Six young girls, all dressed alike, laughingly trip down the stairs and are ushered to the waiting carriages.

At last the mystery is solved! It is a wedding, and "here comes the bride." 'Tis Martha Race, her mist-like veil floating about her. The bloom of youth is on her cheeks. The light of love is shining in her soft gray eyes. Awaiting her in the hall below is the bridegroom, the original of the picture over the mantel.

The scene changes. I am in the church. A fluttering among the guests tells me the bridal party is arriving. The wedding march is sounding and the bridesmaids are advancing. But how slowly! Will the bride ever reach the chancel! And where is the bridegroom, who should be awaiting her? Suddenly the labored march ceases—

* * * * * * *

The yellow cat had bounded to the floor and Nettie was calling from the doorway: "Miss Martha, look here!"

I roused myself, chagrined at being caught literally napping.

"Nettie," I said, "tell me, who is this?" indicating the portrait over the mantel.

She cast a quick glance over her shoulder before whispering:

"That was Miss Martha's fiance. He was stricken on the morning of their wedding, and died before reaching the church."

A light step sounded behind her, and Miss Martha entered—Miss Martha of the ethereal beauty and the eighty years.

OF THE "APPLE OF DISCORD"

Ancient Fable That Is Probably the Most Interesting to Be Found in Classic History.

The story of the "Apple of Discord" forms one of the most interesting narratives of ancient fable. It is related, the Detroit News observes, that Ate, the goddess of Discord, was not invited to the marriage of Thetis and Peleus, and, becoming enraged at her exclusion, determined to break up the festivities. Accordingly, she happened by when the merrymaking was at its height and tossed an apple into the midst of the gods and goddesses who were assembled. The apple bore the inscription, "To the fairest," and was at once claimed by June, Venus and Minerva.

Paris, the son of King Priam of Troy, was appointed judge to determine who should receive the apple. The three goddesses interviewed him privately, each offering a bribe; Juno promised a kingdom, Minerva military glory, but Venus won him to her side by promising that the most beautiful woman in the world should be his wife. He gave the prize to Venus. Unfortunately, the fairest living lady was Helen, already married to King Menelaus of Sparta, but Venus instructed Paris to "go and get her." He did so, and the indignation following this abduction caused the Greeks to coalesce and attack Troy, bringing on the ten years' Trojan war.

Do Animals Reason?

My old-timer up in Alaska, prospecting, also makes me happy once in a while with some first-hand natural history, according to the writer of "Out of Doors" in the Saturday Evening Post. He says: "I have seen an article about animals—say, dogs and bears—having reasoning power. That is nothing new to me, for I have had plenty of time to study dogs, and if they can't reason they ought to be killed, for they are worthless. I have two sledge dogs, half-wolf, and it is wonderful what they will do. I have seen my leader locate a trail with six feet of snow drifted over it, and do many other things that would make an ordinary man guess. I have traveled 2,800 miles over my trap lines in the last winter and have never seen them pass a trap or a snare yet. They always know where the next set is—and find it, although it would be lost if they would go a few feet farther down the trail. As to bears, they will find the weakest place in the cache quicker than a man would—they always find the easiest place to break in. I find it also very interesting to watch my foxes."

Finder of the Yellowstone.

John Colter, discoverer of Yellowstone National park, guided his steps to the Teton peaks in Wyoming in 1807, and the Astoria expedition hailed the peaks with relief while floundering through the wilderness in 1811.

No Variety.

"Ah!" sighed the incubator egg as it looked about at the level sea of other ovals about it, "from one layer to another!"—Retail Ledger, Philadelphia.

British "Wreck Receivers."

The entire coastline of the British Isles is divided up into sections, and over each section presides a man known as the Receiver of the Wreck. Should a vessel be dashed on the rocks the Receiver of Wreck for that section goes at once to the scene of the disaster and takes general command over everyone present, including even the captain and crew of the distressed ship. For the time being all the goods from the ship, whether salved or washed ashore, are under his direct control, and he has full power as to their disposal. Thus, in a case of perishable goods, he can order them to be sold at once.

Straight Hair Land.

From the women's point of view, the province of Bergen, in southwest Norway, is in one respect the least desirable place of residence in the world. It rains there 300 days in the year and, owing to the moistness of the climate, hair will not stay in curl. It is to despair! For this very reason, however, hair-curlers are in extraordinary demand there, and the American consul for that district writes to advise our manufacturers of marcel waves and other such contrivances that Bergen offers a most promising opportunity for the sale of their beautifying instruments.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Don't Worry, Sweetheart; I'll Escape in Two Years

Washington.—"Don't worry, sweetheart, I'll escape inside of two years," Joseph Lauzon, charged with 200 burglaries here in the last eighteen months, replied to the warm embrace of the woman who had gone into his cell to bid him good-by the other day. Arrested with him, but later released, Miss Virginia Betty Carroll told Lauzon: "If they give you fifty years, I'll still be waiting for you when you're free."

Playing the Game

By MINNIE M. TOWNSEND.

© 1932, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

It was Saturday, the day of days to the members of the Crane family. For was not that the day when the local high school team played football and wasn't their Jim one of the stars on said team? As usual, Jim hurried off directly after dinner to the athletic field, with many admonitions from his mother not to get his neck broken, and gay encouragement from his father to "give 'em a couple of touchdowns today." Sister Betty hustled through her dessert to join a crowd of gay high school rooters, resplendent in fluttering school colors. And then Jim's father laid aside his newspaper and went in quest of his overcoat.

Mrs. Crane, still in morning house dress, glanced up from the silverware she was polishing. "Going to the game, Pa?"

"Wouldn't miss it." He hesitated a moment, and then asked in a casual way: "Why don't you come along, too, Ma?" He knew it was a useless question, and yet there was an eager, wistful light in his eyes. To see Jim make a touchdown, with mother in the grandstand beside him, was a joy too far-fetched to ever become a reality.

"Come on, Ma, be a sport," he coaxed again, but Mrs. Crane shook her head carelessly. "I've got dozens of things to do this afternoon, Jim."

"Let 'em go, or do them tonight," he persisted.

"No," decisively, "I don't understand the game, anyway. I wouldn't know a touchdown from a forward pass."

"I'd explain things as they happened, Mary."

"No, it would only be a waste of time and money. You can tell me all about it when you return."

Disconsolately Jim's dad left the house and joined the crowds that surged toward the field. It bothered him to think that Mary just wouldn't shake off the accumulation of household tasks to join him in anything except, perhaps, an occasional movie.

And then the game was on, and for the time being Crane, Sr., forgot his domestic troubles. The teams were well matched, and fought gamely through three scoreless quarters. The final quarter started with a flourish, and the visiting team plowed through the local team for a touchdown. They failed to kick the goal. The score was six to nothing, and only seven minutes left to play.

One, two three downs and then, suddenly, out of an apparently solid mass, slid the slim figure of Jim Crane. The crowd arose to its feet as though by a signal. The visitors seemed dazed at the turn of affairs. One made a frenzied grab at the boy, but it only served to wrench his shoulder. The ball remained coddled against his side. Amid a wild burst of applause, Jimsey carried the ball back of the line. One moment remained in which the ball was kicked over successfully, and the score stood 7 to 6 in favor of the home team. The whistle pealed shrilly.

They bore Jim home on stalwart shoulders. Jim, Sr., heard them talking about his son all the way home, but he alone, with a heart bursting with pride, had no one to confide in.

The supper table was merely an adoration party composed of Betty's friends. One gay young miss turned suddenly to Mrs. Crane and inquired how she had liked the game. Mrs. Crane had laughed carelessly: "Oh, I never go, dear; too many things to do at home."

The young lady in question stared as only the modern young person can. "You don't go? Why, mother never misses a game. Bert is only a sub, and is seldom used, but ma says she wants to be there when he does play. She knows all about the game, and can tell me a few things, believe me."

Later on, when the family had dispersed for the evening, Mrs. Crane sat down and began, not to work on the ever present embroidery, but to think. She recalled an editorial she had recently read. One sentence stood out clearly: "To attend a ball game with hubby may mean more to his happiness than the frenzied dusting of an immaculate house."

Another week passed as usual, to the red letter day. They did not notice that Ma was dressed for the street, an unusual thing at noon, on a Saturday. She hovered about them, restless, unbusy fingers fairly aching to tackle the dinner dishes. Jim, Sr., put on his coat, fussed a bit with the clothes brush, mumbled a careless good-by and was off. He had not even asked her to go along, and she sat staring at the closed door, hot tears of disappointment trickling down her cheeks. She had dreamed of what he would say when she replied to his usual question, "Sure I'll go; wait till I get my hat." He hadn't even given her a chance.

She wanted to sulk, and then she thought of the boyish lonesomeness of her big, bashful husband, and she hurriedly slipped on her things, gave a whimsical glance at the dinner dishes piled high, and set out.

Following the crowd, she landed at the field and bought her ticket. She had no idea which were considered the best seats, but again she followed the crowd out to the bleachers. She tripped along as though always accustomed to this sort of thing, when, in reality, her heart was pounding wildly and she wanted only to sink into a corner somewhere. She glanced up into the sea of faces. A man arose suddenly, eyes wide, unbelieving recognition, turning presently into incredulous delight, "Mary," he called softly.

Unbounded relief shot through her, and she smilingly wended her way up to his side.

She settled herself as though born to a football game, and smiled quizzically up into his astonished eyes. Dozens of pretty things, years unsaid, surged to his lips, but he only remarked eagerly as the players ran confidently across the field: "There is Jimsey, Mary. He's in fine trim today. Watch him practice, and he's right there with the goods."

Mary smiled happily. "He's always there with the goods," she repeated softly. She knew nothing of touchdowns, end runs, shifts and the what not of a football game, but she did know that she was not to be "penalized" in the future, because she had decided to "play the game in the present." The game was on.

VIRTUE MATTER OF LOCALITY

Standards Differ According to Whether One Lives in the City or the Country.

In the great open spaces virtue is more or less of a local issue. The man who gets drunk on a mountain top offends nobody but himself. Here in New York the neighbors hear about it.

All the tests of virtue are rigorous for folk who live elbow to elbow with nothing between them but partitions of little old last year's wallpaper and a thin dab of plaster. If the man in the flat next door, or the one underneath, ever spoke of us as a good man it would mean something. As a matter of fact, he is not likely to do so, because he thinks twelve o'clock is late, and often annoys our guests by rapping on the steampipes. However, all this is irrelevant. If he gave us a character it would be won in spite of the closest possible scrutiny. The things which the neighbors think about Farmer Jones are not half so important. He lives ten miles up the road around the bend. At that distance almost anybody might look good.

Perhaps he seems less amiable to Mrs. Jones, but nobody would think of asking a farmer's wife for an opinion about anything. Farmer Jones is under no necessity of cultivating manners, because he can be as rude as he pleases, and it will pass for downright native frankness. To his horses he is privileged to talk even more freely. And, speaking of horses, according to our city standards, Farmer Jones would very probably be set down, or set up, as a swindler. In his community they merely laugh and call him a shrewd man for horse trading.—Heywood Broun, in Judge.

Where Becky Sharp Lived.

Careful students of Thackeray have been amused at the identification of the house of Becky Sharp with a little house near Shepherd's market, a little house, with only one window on the ground floor and an area. This is contrary to the generally accepted house in Curzon street. It measures four stories and a bit, and, while it is very narrow, as compared with its height, it has a certain distinction, especially about the front door, which would, no doubt, appeal to Becky. "A very small, comfortable house in Curzon street" was Thackeray's description, and after that your true lover of Thackeray will refuse to surrender to anything near Shepherd's market!—Christian Science Monitor.

"25% Cook and 75% Oven!"

Good ovens make good cooks—poor ovens make poor cooks. Every woman knows how true this is.

So the big point to consider, when purchasing a gas range, is the oven.

Estate GAS RANGES
Bake with Fresh Air

There are no openings in the sides of the oven—no chance for the products of combustion to enter where the food is cooking. Better baking and roasting, sweeter and more wholesome, are thus achieved. And absolute heat uniformity in every part of the oven is assured.

Additional Baking Capacity, Too!

A 16-inch Estate oven actually has the baking capacity of an ordinary 18-inch oven. That's because baking can be placed closely against the walls. In the ordinary range, with openings in the side linings, there is at least one inch of oven space, at each side, which cannot be utilized.

Estate Gas Ranges are made in a wide variety of styles, sizes and finishes, to suit all requirements. Several models are enameled throughout, and some of the cabinet ranges can be had with or without an oven heat control.

Art and Money Making.

The old theory that when art turns to making money, either to satisfy need or to gratify desire, it is near death is open to debate. Too many young people who have determined to devote their life to art mistrust the "world's coarse thumb" and the judgment of those who pay money for things that please them. The first thing for any young artist or writer to understand is that he must have something to say that will appeal to ordinary human beings. If he can manage to express himself through his art and still keep a certain amount of liking for the common people and understanding of them, he needn't fear for the outcome.—Youth's Companion.

WOMAN SHERIFF HEADS ALL RAIDS

First to Hold Position in United States Shirks None of Duties of Office.

FILLS OUT HUSBAND'S TERM

Mrs. McAuley Served for Years as Deputy for Her Late Husband in Michigan County—Determined to Enforce Law.

Bad Axe, Mich.—For the first time in the history of Michigan, and as far as is known in the United States, a woman has been appointed as county sheriff, and has been given full charge of the men deputies in the county.

And this woman, Mrs. Lula McAuley, is no novice at the job either, for she succeeds her husband, Donald McAuley, for many years the Huron county sheriff, and has served several years as a deputy under him. McAuley would have finished his fourth term of office next January, but caught a cold during a raid, which later turned to pneumonia and resulted in his death.

To Finish Husband's Term.

Mrs. McAuley was appointed to complete her husband's term by the unanimous consent of the Huron county probate judge, prosecutor and county clerk.

The new "sheriffess" while, she says, she is not an ardent "dry," is determined that the state and national laws be lived up to within reason, and already she has engineered and taken part in one raid among the hills of north Huron county.

She predicts that the most of her troubles will come from illicit whiskey making. Already, she says, there has been a growth in the number of cases which she has had to handle and she lays this to the report which has reached adjacent counties "that a woman is sheriff in Huron."

Takes Active Part.

Mrs. McAuley says that a woman is equipped by nature and her motherhood instincts to wield a great influence for good over any community from the sheriff's office but says that she is not inclined to run for reelection when her temporary appointment expires next January.

In the meantime she has adopted the policy of being present at every raid and arrest made. Her office staff consists of three male deputies and she admits that most of the work of making the actual arrests will devolve on them, but, she asserts, it is a sheriff's duty to be present when an arrest is made and she intends to see that this is carried out.

Mrs. McAuley admits that the sheriff's office is just as much a man's as any police commissionership in any of the big cities but hopes to fill the job satisfactorily despite her sex.

SQUAW, 42, HAD 24 CHILDREN

Mohawk Indian Woman Has Given Birth to Eight Sets of Twins.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Chief Probation Officer Henry Scull has before him a case of an Indian woman who has been a mother of 28 children. She is forty-two years old. He refuses to make public her name. Her husband is earning $15 a week.

"Mrs. Doe" is a descendant of the Mohawk Indians. When she was fifteen, according to the custom of her tribe, her husband was selected for her. He was her cousin, Deerfoot. She did not quite fancy Deerfoot for a life partner and fled camp, later marrying again.

As years passed "Mrs. Doe" became the mother of six sets of twins. Subsequently she had seven more children. A wealthy aunt in Philadelphia is said to have been the intermediary whereby the children were taken to the tribe as they attained their tenth day of existence. The little ones were taken to Canada and reared by the Mohawks.

"Mrs. Doe" later on married a widower with four children. Two sets of twins and another child were born Several of her children have died.

PIRATES ROVE OFF MEXICO

Make War on Ocean Ships for First Time in More Than Hundred Years.

Monterey, Mexico.—For the first time in more than one hundred years piracy is being practiced in the lower Gulf of Mexico bordering the coast of Tabasco and Campeche, according to reports to the Mexican government.

It is stated that during the last few days several small steamships, including a coastwise mailboat, have been boarded by pirates and robbed of money and the more valuable parts of the cargo.

Bandits also are roaming part of Tabasco and Campeche in such numbers that farmers have been forced to abandon their crops and flee to towns for safety.

MECCA FOR VISITORS

Washington May Become "Convention City" of Country.

This Spring Is Proving Record Breaker for Delegations Visiting Capital—New Auditorium Planned to House Meetings.

Washington.—That Washington may soon win the title of "Convention city" is the prophecy of some old inhabitants. They say that convention meetings in the national capital grow in size and number every year.

No one keeps an official record of the organizations and their delegates that visit the city, but according to street car conductors, White House guards and watchmen in the government buildings, this spring is proving a record breaker for delegations, writes Frederick J. Haskin in Chicago Daily News.

There is no season of the year when Washington is not entertaining visitors who have gathered from the ends of the country to discuss by-laws and election of officers and to take a look at the government in action. But spring is the most favorable time for seeing Washington, and therefore spring always brings an unusually large assortment of convention followers.

The capital, with its trees bursting into pale green, its cherry blossom drive along the tidal basin, and its gay flower beds, is at its best. Later, Washington settles down to hot weather—though the chamber of commerce never admits it, and now and then displays impressive statistics and comparative reports of the weather bureau showing that the capital with its 105,000 trees, its 6,000 acres of parks and its river breeze is not so hot as it is sometimes represented.

In spite of those encouraging bulletins, spring continues to be the fashionable convention season.

Already, this year, the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Daughters of 1812 have advanced upon Washington with fluttering badges. The League of American Penwomen has gathered its collection of literary notables and celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary with a book fair, breakfast, carnival ball and other functions. And, with less pomp and ceremony, 1,000 oculists and several other scientific groups have been conferring in odd corners of the city between banquets and important sessions.

Up to now, Washington has had to admit that its inadequate assembly halls were no attraction to conventions. The small and middle-sized halls about the city have sometimes failed to expand enough to accommodate all the delegates and visitors to an unusually popular convention.

Plans are under way now, however, for an auditorium which will seat 5,000 persons. It will be thoroughly modern.

This building is to be located opposite the interior building, three blocks from the White House.

HAS NEW INVENTION

Look closely and you will see in the large market basket not groceries from the market, but a real for-sure live baby. Mrs. David Sherer of Fort Myer, Virginia, says that her baby Monita is no trouble to her at all—she just places her snugly in the warm basket and goes about on her shopping tour with no inconvenience at all.

Restore Minnie Hauk's Sight.

Paris.—Baroness Von Hesse-Wartegg, formerly Minnie Hauk of New York, has undergone what is described as a most successful operation for blindness. Her eyesight has been failing for the last seven years, until recently she had been barely able to distinguish between day and night. The operation was performed at the American hospital here

Lost Eye When Mule Kicked.

USE CHAPELS ON WHEELS

Methodists of Northwest Plan Extensive Campaign in Country Districts This Summer.

Seattle, Wash.—A number of district conferences of Northwest Methodist Episcopal churches advocate a chapel-on-wheels campaign this summer to cover a vast area of territory where the population is scattered. There are hundreds of hamlets, agricultural communities and isolated places where the Gospel is not now heard.

The mounted chapels are to be constructed on trucks equipped with living quarters for the parson, a platform in the rear from which services may be conducted. In the equipment will be included graphophone with Gospel records, portable organ, books of songs and Bibles for collective reading.

The first of these wheeled churches will leave here early in May for the lumber camps above Snoqualmie. The pastor in charge of the first chapel will be a student from the College of Puget Sound (Tacoma) Theological school.

Wooden Leg as Flask.

Spartanburg, S. C.—The storied "uses of adversity" proved anything but sweet the other day for Alex Ballenger, a one-legged Spartanburg Negro. When a faint and muffled "splash, splash" was heard to accompany him as he hobbled down Main street a policeman took him in. At the station a cache in his wooden leg was found to contain a pint of liquor. The judge imposed a fine of $100 for transporting intoxicants.

You Said It.

"There was Mr. Watts, a man of note. And I went to his studio, and there was much mestification, and screens were drawn round the easel, and curtains were drawn, and I was not allowed to see anything. And then at last the screens were put aside, and there I was. And I looked. Mr. Watts, a great man, he said to me, 'How do you like it? And I turned to Mr. Watts, and I said, 'Man, I would have ye know, I am in the habit of wurin clean lunen.'"—Thomas Carlyle, as quoted in the Whistler Journal, by E. R. and J. Pennell.

To Double Track this Summer

Two years ago, when the Street Car Co. succeeded in getting council to grant them the increased car fare, Councilman M. W. Westlake had a clause embodied in the resolution to the effect that the car company should double track West Broad street from Highland Ave. to Hague. Though he did not vote for the resolution granting the increased fare, Councilman Westlake took this means of getting this clause inserted in the resolution that the people might get something out of it anyway. The car company not making any effort to put in the double tracks, Mr. Westlake had a resolution adopted some time ago asking why it was not done, but no reply was received. Then this spring he had another resolution passed and sent to the company in regard to their fulfillment of the agreement. And were they going to do so, and when, and to give an answer "yes" or "no."

To this the president of the car company gave reply that the double track would be laid this summer. So if this is to be carried out it certainly will be received with gladness by all the people of this community.

The city law department is working on getting affairs closed up where it may take over that tract of land near the Glenwood park entrance on the West. That high bank will then be graded down to a gentle slope clear back to the park proper, thus doing away with that unsightly land sliding, after every heavy rain, which covers the sidewalk.

The Hilltop Embroidery Club will give a lawn fete on the lawn of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, S. Eureka Ave., for the benefit of the Columbus Baby Camp. The ladies are doing all the preparation and baking themselves. This organization which is 10 years old, is composed of 12 ladies who use this organiaztion as a means of assisting in some way to help humanity where needed. They have always been very active in helping to bring Christmas cheer to needy ones at that season. The ladies composing the membership are as follows: Mesdames G. A. Paine, L. M. Seiller, T. S. Fox, E. E. Shaffer, Chan J. Randall, Denny Wells, G. W. Matson, P. G. Gantz, C. O. Irwin, W. K. Merriman, President; John Evans and Royal Millikin. The first four named ladies are charter members.

If you are called on to buy a ticket to aid the Baby Camp, give them a "glad-hand."

The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce will hold its first annual outing on Wednesday, August 2nd, at Buckeye Lake Park. Reduced rates for adults and children will be secured over the Ohio Electric line. All Chamber of Commerce stores will close that day. Ticket for prizes will be ready by merchants soon.

COMMUNITY DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

The third annual Community Daily Vacation Bible School will be offered the boys and girls of the Hilltop this summer by a corps of able teachers and a program crammed full of good things. The school will be held at the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church but it is for all children of the community regardless of their church affiliation or whether they are in Sunday School or not. The school begins the second week in July and will run for five full weeks. A principal has been secured who will ably direct the activities of the school. Miss Hazel Linville who is getting training for the work at Canton, Ohio, this week will also be a teacher in the school and Miss Evangeline Horn, Normal School trained kindergartner will take charge of the little ones. Parents who want the best place to send their children can not fail to use the advantages of this school which combines worship work, and play with extra large doses of good things thrown in.

Boys will be taught manual work and to make cord hammocks and other useful articles, girls will learn to sew and make baskets and raffia articles and the younger children of the kindergarten will make little toys and cardboard work.

Bible stories will be told every day and memory work done so that each child will learn a great deal of Scripture by memory. Hymns of the Church that all love to sing will be sung daily and the program of games and outings will include swimming and baseball, picnics and field days and all that goes to give a reasonable amount of pleasure along with the study-work.

There will be NO CHARGE this year for the school. Everything is absolutely free to all children who come between the ages of 4 and 14.

The teaching is non-sectarian and only Bible material is used with the hymns and habit talks make up a program of real religious education which no parent can overlook for his children. Boys and girls COME! Parents send your children. Free. Free. Free.

WHAT IS KE-O-KA?

"Yellow Dock is an alternative tonic and detergent. For all impurities of the blood it has no equal.

"Bloodroot grows in shaded woods. It presents a beautiful appearance when cut and placed under a microscope, seeming like an aggregation of minute precious stones. It is useful in bronchitis. It excites the energies of a torpid liver. Prickiyash is a native of North America. It is highly beneficial in chronic rheumatism and whenever an alternative is required."

To this Burdock and Wild Cherry are added. The fact that Ke-O-Ka contains these valuable remedies ought to spread like wildfire. There is nothing like Ke-O-Ka.

THE GREAT NERVE AND BLOOD REMEDY

We are citing these quotations that you may know the excellent qualities of Ke-O-Ka. (Five other extracts of plants and barks that harmonize), make Ke-O-Ka worthy of the reputation that it has achieved.

We are prepared to fill orders quickly. Call E. M. Leach, Hilltop 2466.

FINDS CLUES TO "LOST ATLANTIS"

Englishman's Discoveries Renew Interest in Story of Plato's Submerged Continent.

TAPESTRIES LIKE PHARAOH'S

Believes Indians of San Blas Hinterland Are Survivors of Race Which Inhabited Atlantis—Had Narrow Escapes.

Colon, Panama.—The Lost Atlantis has bobbed up again, this time in Panama. An Englishman, Mitchell-Hedges, recently made a two days' journey into the mountains of the San Blas hinterland, and came back with his suspicions that the Chauquanaqua Indians are the survivors of the once proud inhabitants of Plato's submerged continent.

He brought the suspicions in the shape of tapestries with designs so much like those of Pharaoh's wives that he must have the experts of the British museum and of all the world to pronounce upon them. Incidentally he put President Harding's name on the map in the shape of a "new" mountain, some 8,000 feet high; King George got another of similar altitude, and Doctor Porras a whole range.

The explorer had the usual narrow escapes from imminent death by sea and land, and has set tongues wagging about the likelihood of the isthmus being the tail-end or head-end of the Atlantean continent.

Both Sides of the Case.

Although an American ethnologist, William H. Babcock, has buried Atlantis for the last of many times in his present book, "Legendary Islands of the Atlantic," published by the American Geographical society, this latest resurrection is likely to stir the protagonists of the missing link between Gibraltar and Panama to life again also.

The biggest friend of the long-lost isle is a German, Herr Prof. Frobenius of Berlin, who traversed much of West Africa to see if there were not some leavings of the lost there, and he professed to be quite convinced that there are. Professor Weiner of Harvard, from a study of the similarities of plants and animals of Africa and South America, inclines to the hypothesis that the sons of Ham once passed dry-shod from the Senegal to the Amazon, or vice versa.

It is understood that if Hercules had not gotten home-sick when he had the job of holding up Mount Atlas for a while he might have beaten Columbus by some 4,000 years, and that too, by walking over to Colon, but the Greek explorer had enough of it with that little job around Morocco, so he set up his pillars and went home to his wife, thereby leaving dissension among antiquarians for 50 centuries.

Tapestries in Evidence.

Mitchell-Hedges comes as the climax of a number of explorers who have been dipping into the San Blas problem, and maybe he has the key. He has the advantage of the labors of many predecessors in his task. He has the tapestries, and they look like the work of the Hebrew children who made clothes for Rameses—or maybe, he says, they are like Aztec work. At any rate they are like the work of other people than mere Indians; and how could those mountaineers get those designs except by having them handed down from the folks who crossed the sea when it wasn't any sea at all?

Moreover, the men in the mountains wore great big earrings of solid gold. Who taught them to dig for gold? The problem is truly formidable, and one may watch the ethnological journals now with interest.

SHANGHAI BUILDING AT BEST

1921 Record Touches Highest Mark in History of International Settlement.

Shanghai.—Building activity in the international settlement of Shanghai touched its highest mark in 1921, according to public records recently issued. The total value of new building for which permits were issued in the year is taels 21,000,000—approximately $14,700,000 gold—and at the end of the year 614 blocks of new buildings were in course of erection.

"At one period of the year out of an average unskilled labor force of 36,000 two-thirds were employed on a daily basis, with pay ranging from 32 to 38 cents, subsidiary coinage," the report says. The figures given are based upon the Mexican dollar, which roughly, at current rates, has a value of 60 cents gold.

MUST PAY $10 TO ENTER GERMANY

Foreign Office Now Charges Same as United States Would Tax Entrants.

VEXATIONS BESET TRAVELERS

American Tourist Who Crosses Europe Must Be Prepared to Pay $10 to Cross Every Frontier—Resorts Are Crowded.

Berlin.—The German foreign office is now charging foreign visitors to Germany the same amount for passport visas that the respective governments of their countries ask of Germans. Because exchange fluctuates so rapidly the foreign office fixes the number of marks the foreigner must pay anew each month. This means that, while Austrians can now enter Germany on paying the equivalent of 15 cents, Americans must be prepared to pay at least $10 to cross every frontier, and if one should have failed to have fulfilled formalities he is burdened with absurdly heavy fines.

Traveler Objects.

A recent traveler coming from Italy to Munich by way of the Austrian strip of territory through Salzberg was asked by the Austrian authorities to pay the equivalent of $20 for their little rubber stamp. Objecting to paying this amount, the traveler finally induced the authorities to reduce the amount to the customary $10.

Difficulties by both Polish and German governments in crossing Prussia and the Danzig neck of Polish territory will continue to take the pleasure out of travel and to hamper business in this corner of the world. Both states demand full sets of special visas and the universal $10 payment of Americans. The Poles rarely hesitate in the corridor to turn out all who fail to observe this letter of the law, whatever their nationality is.

Now that reparations, railroad and other international commissions are meeting it is time that another one meets and determines ways to eliminate petty vexations to travel.

German summer resorts, and especially bathing beaches, will be particularly overcrowded this summer, according to the statements which German hotel proprietors make. They are trying to keep as wide a range of prices as possible for all sizes of pocketbooks, but the steady increase now in cost of living is forcing all prices skyward. The range for rooms in the smaller bathing places today extends from 100 to 800 marks, and for Americans from a half again to double this amount, or in other words from 75 cents to $5.

Ordinarily the German hotels and pensions made pension rates. Now, owing to the wide fluctuations in food prices, they give a price for rooms and leave the amount they charge for meals open.

It is possible at most of the summer resorts to secure three and four rooms with kitchen at prices around 12,000 to 20,000 marks, or in dollars from $400 to $700 for the entire three months' season.

REMOVE TUMOR FROM BRAIN

New York Girl Expects to Have Sight Restored After Unusual Operation.

New York.—An operation described by surgeons as "quite remarkable" has been performed at Ann May hospital, Spring Lake, N. J. Dr. K. Winfield Ney of New York, chief of the neurological-surgical division of the United States army medical corps, removed a tumor from the region of the pituitary gland of the brain of Miss Marian Vogel of Asbury Park. The girl is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Vogel.

The tumor was the size of a small walnut. To reach it an opening was made in the skull and the left lobe of the brain was lifted. Miss Vogel was on the operating table for several hours, during which a blood transfusion was necessary. The tumor had caused partial blindness. A complete recovery is expected.

CHIN BONE GRAFTED IN ARM

Boston Doctors Use Novel Operation in Treating Wound Caused by Automobile Accident.

New York.—Gerald MacKenzie, in charge of the accounting department of the United Fruit company at Almaranti, Panama, arrived here from Port Limon, en route to Boston, where a bit of bone from his chin will be grafted to his arm.

MacKenzie smashed his arm six months ago in a motor accident, and it never healed properly. Specialists advised him to see bone specialists in Boston. They advised the operation. Much interest is manifested in MacKenzie's case by reason of the unusualness of the operation.

The Flower Hat

By LILLIACE MITCHELL

© 1922, by International Newspaper Syndicate

Bill Kemp, the head of the exchange department, looked up wearily from his desk. It had been a day of odd jobs—refunds, complaints, exchanges. Everything had been relatively unimportant and yet everything demanded instant attention.

Had Bill Kemp been ten years older than he was he would not have taken it all so seriously, and consequently would have been as fresh at the end of the day as he was early in the morning.

"I wanted," said a pair of violet eyes, at least Bill Kemp would have sworn that it was the eyes that spoke, so timidly and questioningly did they regard him. "I want to know if I could do something about my flower hat."

Bill Kemp sighed. They were such marvelous eyes. And they were mundanely interested in a hat—a silly flower hat.

"Well," he said gruffly, "what did you contemplate doing about this flower hat? If it's been worn it cannot possibly be accepted for exchange or refund."

The latter words issued mechanically from his mouth, and he wondered subconsciously how many hundreds of times he had uttered that same sentence — sometimes about gloves, sometimes about hair goods, sometimes about shoes.

"Oh, it hasn't been worn!" came the soft voice again. The voice sounded as though it was full of tears, and he looked at the violet eyes again. Sure enough, there were large tears there.

Bill Kemp steeled himself. All women used tears as a means to an end, and he determined that he would not be taken in.

"And So You Want the Dollar Back?"

"Well, go on, go on," he said, as testily as he could.

"You see, I decided last Saturday that I could take it—it's a beautiful hat—all violets and orchid tulle. Oh, it was really the most beautiful hat in the whole world, I think," she said wistfully. "I looked and looked at it—before, you know—and on Saturday I paid a deposit on it—a deposit of a dollar. I was to take it this Saturday, but—" the lips that were soft and pink closed firmly. "I—I believe that I shan't need it, after all."

"And so you want the dollar back again, I take it?" he said, tapping his pencil against the desk and regarding it coolly.

"Oh, my, no," she said softly. "Of course they wouldn't give back the dollar, but I went to the millinery department, and the clerk said that I had agreed to take it, and I would have to finish paying for it. I—I have the money, but—"

"Will you sit down?" said Bill Kemp, rising suddenly, wondering why it was that he had not thought of it before. "I haven't been head of the department long, and I am at a loss to understand one thing. Why do women buy a thing, take it home, and run right back here to return it?"

The violet eyes crinkled at the corners and the soft pink lips twitched.

"I don't know," she confessed. "I never do myself. It's not that I probably wouldn't if I had the chance, but I work, and so scarcely have time to buy what I need, let alone buying things for the fun of thinking I really owned them for a while before I returned them. It must be lots of fun, mustn't it?"

"But you want to leave this pansy hat on our hands," he expostulated.

"Oh, oh, not pansy!" she exclaimed in horrified tones. "It is violets—violets and orchid tulle. And besides, I don't want to leave it on your hands. I'd love it myself, only I heard about this Mrs. Benzingen whose husband is in the hospital, and whose children are all so small that she can't work. It wouldn't be right to wear a lovely hat of violets and orchid tulle when they might be—hungry. If you say I don't need to take the hat I'm going to take a basket out there tonight." She looked at her watch. "It's 'way, 'way out in—"

"You run along and get the basket, and I'll see about the dollar refund. Then when you get the basket filled come back here and get the dollar and I'll take the basket out for you—wherever it is. You can't be running all over town—a girl like you—"

He listened to her words of thanks with an air of abstraction.

"We ought to get a bite of supper at a restaurant first, maybe," he said nonchalantly, quite as though he were in the habit of asking strange girls to eat with him.

He sent the call boy for the dollar and pulling a card from his pocket, wrote down:

"She'd like a hat—violets—later."

And the violet-eyed Mrs. Bill Kemp with her still-shiny wedding ring, was happily surprised on her birthday a few months later with a large round hatbox tied with a huge violet bow. The hatbox held a hat of violets and tulle.

SELL DAUGHTERS, BRAG OF PRICES

Fathers in French South African Colony Drive Hard Bargain With Suitors.

TOWN HALL IS MARKET PLACE

Deals Are Always Settled in the Oriental Manner of Bargaining—French Government Seeks to Wipe Out Practice.

Paris.—The French colonial office is investigating ways and means of wiping out slave selling and slavery in general in certain sections of France's possessions in Africa.

In the tribe of the Kabylie, the French colony in Africa, fathers sell their daughters and brag of the high prices they get for them. A Parisian traveler, De Waleffe, who went to Africa with Albert Sarraut, the French colonial minister, and has just returned from extensive journeys in the colonies, reports that France is very much misguided in believing that women are comparatively free and highly considered in the Babylie tribe.

M. de Waleffe was told by a proud father that he had sold his first daughter for 6,000 francs, but that he got 14,000 francs for the second girl, as she was very pretty. All the fathers gather for their Turkish coffee at the Caravanserai and discuss between puffs of their narghiles (Turkish water-pipes) the prices they expect to get for their daughters or brag of the amount somebody paid them.

Suitors Drive Hard Bargain.

The deals are always settled in the typical oriental manner of bargaining. The father asks several times as much as he thinks he can get and the suitor offers as little as he can without insulting the maiden. Then they settle down to business, each reducing or raising the price as the hours pass. Finally they reach a point midway between the two original figures and the transaction is over; but it has taken days to accomplish.

The women of Kabylie are sold at an early age, sometimes at twelve or thirteen years. Once they leave their paternal roof for the harem of their purchaser, their days of pleasure are over and they face a life-long slavery of hard work.

The one redeeming factor in the sale of the women in Kabylie is that they are sold only as wives.

In Asia Minor, where the many scattered tribes of Circassians sell their women, the morality is not so high, and the daughters of the tribes are sold to anybody as long as a high enough price is paid.

Edhem Said Bey, a Turk who was feeling acutely the servant problem in Constantinople, tells of going to Asia Minor and buying half a dozen servants. He went to the first Circassian village and asked the chief of the elders to exhibit the daughters for sale.

Fathers Assemble Girls.

In the evening fifteen to twenty girls were assembled in the town hall with their fathers. They were dressed to show themselves off to advantage.

Every man wanted as much as he could get for his daughter, and the bey had to deal with them one by one, listening to them enumerate the particular charms and abilities.

After long bargaining with the fathers the bey went to the market and bought donkeys, buffaloes and silver-mounted arms for a tenth of the price he had agreed upon for the girls. These were then presented to the fathers as payment.

When these girls are delivered they are carefully veiled and can travel anywhere with their purchasers unmolested, for in the Near East no one, not even a government official, would dare lift the veil of a Moslem woman.

PART VITAMINS PLAY IN FOOD

Smithsonian Institution Report Gives Facts on Nutritional Value of Foods.

TELLS OF BIG DINOSAURS

Fossil Remains of Big Reptile Found Only in America—Agricultural Insect Pests Sometimes Entirely Suppressed by Birds.

Washington.—In the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution an article on vitamins by W. D. Haliburton describes what is known to date on this new discovery relating to foods and their nutritional value. In comparing the building of the body to the building of a house, the well known elements of our food, proteins, fats, carbohydrates, salts and water, correspond to the brick which are useless unless held together with mortar, to which the vitamins are compared.

When the chemically purified elements mentioned are given to young animals growth ceases and can only be induced by adding to the diet natural foods rich in the accessory factors or vitamins. The author then cites three known kinds of vitamins, with the "deficiency diseases" which a lack of each kind brings on. He concludes by saying: "The field is a fruitful one, and one can only trust that with fresh research by other workers our knowledge in this direction may be amplified and thus rendered of even greater benefit to mankind."

Dr. Edgar T. Wherry describes his experiments in determining the relation of soil acidity to the distribution of plants, and gives in detail a field method which can be used by any one for determining the acidity of any desired soil. Through his researches Doctor Wherry has shown that certain native plants which have been considered impossible to cultivate in some localities can be made to grow by giving the soil the specific acidity which has been found to be the best for this particular plant.

Great Horned Dinosaurs.

The great horned dinosaurs of the upper cretaceous geological period are described and illustrated by C. W. Gilmore. Fossil remains of these prehistoric reptiles so far have been found only in America. The striking feature of the horned dinosaurs is the enormous head armed with horns and a bony crest projecting backward over the neck, the skull in old individuals sometimes reaching a length of eight feet, although the brain is in proportion the smallest in any animal, being only the size of a man's fist.

Regarding the disappearance of these animals, Mr. Gilmore says:

"The ceratopsians (horned dinosaurs) made many attempts to perfect their skeleton organization, to bring it into harmony with their changing surroundings, and it seems a pity they should have been so suddenly exterminated; but all things have their day, even the horned dinosaurs."

An article that will be of interest to bird lovers is one by W. L. McAtee describing actual instances in which many different species of birds have greatly reduced and sometimes suppressed entirely agricultural insect pests. The instances given, which are all from reliable correspondents, relate to thirty-two different insect pests and include more than seventy cases in which these pests were exterminated locally. In many of these cases the saving of a crop from certain destruction from insects seems wholly to be the work of birds and there is no doubt that birds have been of great value to American agriculturists. The cases cited show, moreover, that even greater results may be expected when more organized and widespread efforts are made to increase the number of birds.

Senses of Insects.

The senses of insects are discussed by Dr. N. E. McIndoo, who states that insects, like all other animals, acquire their information concerning the world through their senses. To human beings the world is chiefly a world of visions or sights, all other senses being secondary; to the bloodhound the world is one of scents or smells; to such insects as ants and bees the world is not only a world of smells, but this sense is so very important to them that should it suddenly be destroyed, these insects could no longer exist.

Doctor McIndoo then describes his researches on all of the senses of insects and their reactions to certain stimuli. In conclusion, the author says: "Let us cease looking with scorn upon insects. Instead we should marvel at the things they have accomplished. Comparing their organization with ours, they have perhaps accomplished comparatively more than we have. Some of the social insects probably adopted the laws of division of labor before primitive man did, and they not only had equal suffrage, but also woman suffrage long before the dawn of our civilization."

TIMBER LOSS HEAVY

32,500 Forest Fires in United States in Five Years.

7,500,000 Acres Burned Over Each Year, Causing Loss of $17,240,000—Much of This Loss Due to Human Agencies.

Syracuse, N. Y.—The New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse university states that the average number of forest fires in the United States during the last five years is 32,500; they burned over each year 7,500,000 acres, causing an annual loss of $17,240,000. This loss means that during the last five years forest fires have burned over an area equal almost to the combined area of New York and Massachusetts, and that each year enough timber goes up in smoke to build a double row of five-room frame houses from New York to Chicago.

The fact that should be brought home to every one is that about 85 per cent of these fires were caused by human agencies, and therefore could have been prevented by the exercise of care on the part of people using the forests.

Forests are absolutely essential to civilization and, with an inevitable timber shortage facing us, we can ill afford to burn them. As forests burn down lumber goes up. Forest fires destroy in a few minutes what nature has taken a century to build. New York state has efficient forest fire protection, but it cannot wholly eliminate fire losses unless campers and others using the forests do their part to prevent conflagrations caused by their carelessness. Good citizenship demands being as careful with fire in the forests as with fire in the home.

The observance of a few commonsense rules will solve the problem: Put out your camp fire with water before leaving it. Be sure matches, cigarettes, cigars and pipe ashes are completely out before throwing them away—then step on them to make doubly sure. Build a small camp fire. Build it in the open, not against a tree or log. Scrape away all inflammable material around it. If you find a fire, try to put it out. If you can't, report it at once to the nearest forest ranger or fire warden. Keep in touch with the forest rangers.

RIVAL SLAYS PARIS APACHE

Then Victor and Seconds Get 2 Years in Prison for Participating in Knife Duel.

Paris, France.—A duel to the death over a woman has brought prison sentences to the victor, Maurice Pinteaux, an apache, and the witnesses of the fight.

The court rejected the defense's plea that dueling with knives in the underworld was quite as respectable as sword or pistol affairs before top-hatted society leaders.

Pinteaux and his seconds were sentenced to two years' imprisonment each and the director of the combat to six months for their parts in the death of Charles Lallemant, another apache. Lallemant was formerly the affinity of Louise Rattier, but Pinteaux won her from him.

The testimony showed that the duel was conducted according to set rules. Similar knives, well sharpened at the scene by the witnesses, were given to the combatants.

Lallemant disregarded the rules. When he attempted to follow up his advantage of drawing first blood by kicking vigorously at Pinteaux's abdomen, the other apache closed in on him and repeatedly stabbed his opponent.

SWEDE EXODUS TO U. S. ON

Heavy Emigration From Aaland Islands Reported—Swedish Government Alarmed.

Stockholm.—The exodus of Swedes from the Aaland islands to the United States has begun. Several groups of 50 persons already are on their way.

Sweden is alarmed over this new emigration tide. The islands, which lie in the Gulf of Bothnia, between Sweden and Finland, were claimed by both countries. A year ago the League of Nations council awarded them to Finland.

A majority of the population of 25,000 is Swedish, and Sweden is anxious to have this stock remain Swedish, even under Finnish rule.

BRITISH TO BOOST WINE

Week's Campaign Planned to Re-educate English Palate for Finer Vintages.

London.—English palates, long noted for their appreciation of fine old wines, are in danger of deterioration because of the lower price of vintages, according to a group of prominent wine merchants who propose an English "wine week" in emulation of the French custom. Wine, they declare, is no longer a luxury, as the lower price has brought it within reach of all.

The purpose of wine week, it is said, will be to educate the English taste for wines and also to instruct diners in the elementary rules and traditional ranges of beverage selections.

Vol. 6. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, June 22, 1922 No. 11

BOYS-GIRLS!

The Community Daily Vacation Bible School which begins the second week in July FREE to all children will have some special features this year. It is being whispered that some moving pictures will be shown and some other good things will be on the program. Of course there will be Bible stories, good singing, games and picnics. All parents of the Hilltop are asked to send their children to the kindergarten and main school. Children 3 to 14 years of age are invited free of charge to come. No expense of any kind will be asked.

A ceremony uniting in marriage Miss Margaret Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Brown, 420 S. Harris Ave., to Owen A. Doody, son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick H. Doody, 2270 N. High St., was performed Thursday morning at the home of Rev. William Connolly, assistant pastor of Holy Name Church. Miss Alice Adams and Lawrence Williams were the attendants.

The Brotherhood Bible Class of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church together with their wives, held their their annual outing Tuesday evening, June 20th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Cochran, Clime Road. Games of various kinds were played and a picnic supper was served on the lawn. Mr. and Mrs. Cochran furnished home made ice cream while Bruce Oyler passed cigars and candy. There were fifty present. In addition to those from the Hilltop there were present Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Chamberlain, who are now living near Plain City. Mrs. Deems and Mrs. Earl claim to be the champion Croquet players and Mrs. Riley thinks she can beat the men sawing wood. Al Market and Rev. Shields were the star batters and base runners in the ball game, while Tom Jones starred at the supper table and wood splitting. The meeting was declared a huge success by all present.

The W. H. M. S. of Glenwood M. E. Church met at the Parsonage Thursday, June 15, with a splendid attendance. The annual reports for the year, given by the different departments, were splendid. The following officers were then elected for the coming year: President, Mrs. M. H. Prior; Vice-President, Mrs. W. Ireland; Corresponding Sec., Mrs. H. W. Whitehead; Recording Sec., Mrs. E. Garrison, Treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Hartsough.

WHAT IS KE-O-KA?

"Yellow Dock is an alternative tonic and detergent. For all impurities of the blood it has no equal.

"Bloodroot grows in shaded woods. It presents a beautiful appearance when cut and placed under a microscope, seeming like an aggregation of minute precious stones. It is useful in bronchitis. It excites the energies of a torpid liver. Prickly-ash is a native of North America. It is highly beneficial in chronic rheumatism and whenever an alternative is required."

To this Burdock and Wild Cherry are added. The fact that Ke-O-Ka contains these valuable remedies ought to spread like wildfire. There is nothing like Ke-O-Ka.

THE GREAT NERVE AND BLOOD REMEDY

We are citing these quotations that you may know the excellent qualities of Ke-O-Ka. (Five other extracts of plants and barks that harmonize), make Ke-O-Ka worthy of the reputation that it has achieved.

The Columbus Baby Camp on Sullivant Avenue opened for the season last week. Miss Blanche Harris is nurse in charge, with a corps of assistants. This beautiful little spot at the southeast corner of the Hilltop is doing a world of good each summer season for scores of babies and small children, scores of whom owe their health and existence to this camp. One of the buildings, known as the "Baby Cottage," has a capacity for 30 babies, and another, Wells Cottage (donated by Mrs. W. T. Wells, in memory of her late husband), has a capacity for 16 babies of from 2 to 3 years old. It is fully equipped for comfort and pleasure of these children. Then there is the nurses' cottage, having a capacity for eight day and two night nurses. This, together with a laundry and supply cottage and four tents for helpers, all situated in the beautiful grove certainly makes this an ideal baby camp.

It is open from the middle of June to about September 15th, and is supported by free-will offering and gifts of persons interested in helping to keep such a worthy institution going. Any gift will be welcomed by those in charge.

The public is invited to attend a recital by some of the pupils of the Robbins-Greiser School of Music tonight, June 22nd, at 8 o'clock at the Church of Christ on Burgess near Broad.

The Spring Blossoms

By I. WRIGHT

© 1913, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mary Webb had looked through the Sunday supplements carefully. As she stared out of the window toward the sunny south orchard where the spring blossoms were already beginning to show pink and white she shuddered.

"Always the same," she whispered to herself. "Every spring the blossoms, every autumn the haystacks. Ugh!"

She saw Avery Wilson in his orchard on the next place. He had the horse hitched up to a spraying machine and was whistling as he made his way around the trees in need of the solution in the machine. He looked toward the Webb place and Mary drew back from the window.

It was Wednesday, anyhow, she reflected, and she would see him soon enough. Every Wednesday evening, right after supper, he called on her. He always arrived somewhere between 6:30 and 7, and Mary again shuddered as she thought of the early hour.

In the Sunday supplements she had been reading it spoke of the young men calling at 9 or 9:30. And for dances—those started, in the fashionable set, at 10 or after. Mary's lips curved up in a smile as she thought of Avery's face should she suggest starting out to a dance at 10 o'clock.

The whistle of the west-bound train aroused her and she put the bread in the oven. Her mind was on the train as she closed the oven door. The east-bound for the city would come through in forty minutes. The east-bound! The city! Her cousin Sadi lived in the city and was always coaxing her to come up for a visit. Well, why not?

Mary Webb stooped a little and regarded her shiny black hair in the crinkly little mirror above the kitchen sink. It was lying sleek and wavy with not a hair out of place. She could slip into her blue tricotine and make the train in time. How surprised Sadi would be! Sadi had written that she always had callers on Wednesday evenings, and that usually different ones came.

In the part of the country where Mary Webb lived that would be considered not quite nice—to have several young men callers. Each girl had one caller and went everywhere with him until it came time for them to marry. Mary Webb hurried to her room and donned the blue frock. She took her hat from the bag and bent before the glass to adjust it.

The thought ran across her mind that maybe she'd never come back again to this house, to this room, to this glass. Perhaps she would never again see Avery Wilson or hear him whistle. A pang of desolation crossed her heart as the last thought came to her. Somehow things would not be the same if she didn't hear Avery's whistling. But her mouth again curled upward at the corners. There would be some one in the city who would whistle.

She ran to the poultry house where her mother was feeding the baby chicks with the skimmed milk and told her about the trip.

"I'll most likely be back in a few days, but Sadi has been wanting me to come, you know."

"But why select today, and hurrying off like this?" exclaimed her bewildered mother.

But Mary Webb, with a gay nod, was gone, snatching her smart little black fur from the hall rack as she ran. She watched the familiar towns as the train rushed through on its two-hour trip to town. All along the way stretched orchards.

Orchards with their seemingly never-ending blossoms! Pink blossoms and white blossoms! White blossoms and pink ones! The train rushed on shrieking its whistle at each mile crossing; each mile brought more orchards and more spring blossoms. The trees were growing smaller now, though, and the blossoms seemed neither so pink nor so white. The train ground over a switching track and a factory loomed into view.

Now they were on the outskirts of the city and tall smokestacks sent out their black ribbons of soft coal smoke. Every few blocks a city garden with undersized vegetables or drab-colored flowers would loom up. Long rows of tenement buildings with very dirty windows seemed to be speeding by the train. Mary Webb sighed.

She suddenly heard a whistle. Not the whistle of a man but that of a factory. It was quitting time for lunch. Men with tin buckets of dinner streamed out of the factory. Some came in groups of two and three; some were alone. The only common resemblance seemed to be their utter fatigue. And it was only noon. There was a half day yet to work.

Were on the Outskirts of the City.

The picture of Avery Wilson flashed into Mary Webb's mind—Avery Wilson whistling as he followed the horse around with the spraying machine in the south orchard with its spring blossoms. The train was now passing a municipal park, where boys and girls were roller skating on a dirty patch of concrete.

In the station Mary Webb stopped at the telephone booth and called her aunt's number. Sadi was out of town. "She's gone up to Anna's. Spring is such a disagreeable season here in the city," complained her aunt's voice.

"When will a train leave for Rosemary Junction?" asked Mary Webb at the ticket window a moment later. She knew it would be at 3:30, but she wanted to make sure. How her mother would laugh! And Avery Wilson! Well, he would be surprised!

As she jumped off the train at Rosemary Junction the first person she saw was Avery Wilson coming out of the freight house. He was whistling. Mary Webb's heart contracted as she looked at him. She had been doing a lot of thinking.

"Be up after supper," called Avery.

"Y-yes, of course," answered Mary Webb. "And Avery, be sure to come early so we'll have a nice long evening. Mother's got marshmallows for us to toast."

And all the way down the road to the Webb place Mary's eyes were on the spring blossoms.

RICH GIRLS TO WORK

Must Obey Law Requiring Free Service, Says Bulgar Premier.

Girls Between Ages of 16 and 30 Must Work for Government Free Four Months Out of Each Year—Many Are Shirking.

Sofia.—Premier Stambouliisky advocates the arrest and punishment of girls who refuse to obey the new law requiring them to work for the government free four months out of each year.

Under this law girls between the ages of sixteen and twenty, daughters of bourgeois citizens of Varna and Sofia, are required to work, but only 100 have thus far complied, and they are doing sewing, typing and hospital work. The law went into effect May 1.

Those who have refused to obey argue that they are either under or above the stipulated ages, or that they are about to be married, which is one of the excuses allowed. Those who comply belong to some of the wealthiest families, and their mothers accompany them to their work, remaining throughout the eight hours demanded of their daughters. The law is typical of the rule of the peasantry, which M. Stambouliisky represents.

Members of the bourgeois party, fearing the imminence of a peasant dictatorship, are attempting to export their valuables, and many have been caught and jailed. The American legation is under a heavy guard of police and soldiers, owing to the numerous threats received by the minister, Charles S. Wilson.

M. Stambouliisky proposes to give the vote only to those women earning their own livelihood.

"We are now able to do what we will," he said in an address to the peasant congress. "Sofia is another Sodom and Gomorrah, inhabited by speculators and unproducers.

"The bourgeois party has tried to get the king on its side, but the king must remember that it is the people who work, and that if we can make him president of the republic of Bulgaria the old Bulgaria will be finished.

"Let foreigners not mix in our affairs. We will pay our war reparations, if forced to, but we will force those among us who brought on the war to do the paying.

"Bulgaria today is the friend of new Germany and Russia, but no treaties have been signed with anybody except those nations which signed the Genoa nonaggression pact."

HE HEARS "SOB STORIES"

Uncle Sam's official listener to "sob" stories is James A. Finch, pardon attorney for the Department of Justice. Mr. Finch must be the most patient of men who know much of the world's sorrow, for day after day mothers pour their appeals into his ears—pleas for leniency for men imprisoned for crime. Then there are sometimes children who plead for their fathers. The attorney general depends on Finch's personal investigation of appeals which number thousands yearly.

Pig With Five Ears.

Marysville, Mo.—Delbert Very, a farmer living four miles northwest of here, has a pig with five ears. Four of the ears are on one side of the head, and three of them are large and well developed.

Over a Century Ago.

Eureka, Kan.—George A. Gordon, who has lived in the lifetime of every President of the United States except Washington, was one hundred and one years old recently. Members of the family assert that Mr. Gordon is the only grandfather of a Civil war veteran still living, and one of few, if not the only man, living who heard Revolutionary war stories from his grandfather, who fought for independence.

TRAINS APPEAR AGAIN

Economy No Longer Keynote in British Court Functions.

Only Two Yards, However, Necessary to Gain Sanction of British Rulers—Fashionable Dressmakers Happy Again.

London.—Economy is no longer to be the keynote of court functions at Buckingham palace. No more "economy courts," as they were called, are to be held. These were established by their majesties after the war to set fashionable society a much needed example in curbing extravagance.

The seal of royal approval again has been bestowed on court trains. Indeed, no woman can be presented at court who does not wear one. Of course, as a man the lord chamberlain cannot presume to be an expert on fashionable feminine dress, but it is one of his many official duties to lay down the rules and regulations to which women must conform at the most exalted of court functions.

That is one of the things for which he is paid $15,000 a year. He has to be a peer, besides, to qualify for the exalted office which is accounted among the political plums that the prime minister has to give away. The present lord chamberlain is in the top class of the peerage. He is the duke of Atholl.

By restoring the court train he has earned the blessings of the fashionable dressmakers. But they would have lengthened their blessings if he had lengthened the trains. Before the war three yards was their regulation length, while Queen Victoria didn't consider four yards too long. By the new regulations they need be only two yards in length and should not extend more than nineteen inches from the heel of the wearer when standing.

To walk backward before royalty in a train three yards long without getting tangled up in it, imposes a severe tax on the agility and skill of not a few socially ambitious women. Queen Mary is a very kind woman, and she would naturally wish to spare her sex making exhibitions of themselves. Hence she was in favor of the shorter length for trains.

Windham, Me.—Understanding French, Spanish and English, able to name the states of the country, cities and towns of Maine, and to give prompt answers to geographical questions, Mabel Edith Greenlaw, four, is hailed as the child prodigy of this section. She started to walk when she was seven months old. She is particular about her grammar, and does not hesitate to make corrections in the speech of those within her hearing.

PRISONERS MAKE OWN LAWS

Kentucky Offenders Tried in "Jail Court"—"Whipping Boss" Does Rest.

Ines, Ky.—A Martin county jury upheld the "laws" made by the self-government body of prisoners in the jail at Ines when Lewis Maynard, a prisoner, sued for torn clothing and injured feelings.

In the pure democracy a new prisoner has the choice of paying a $1 fine or receiving 50 blows from a hard paddle. Baths are compulsory and profane language is forbidden.

Offenders are tried in the "jail court" and the "whipping boss" executes sentences.

Berlin Doctors Listed Who Speak English

Berlin.—Americans in Berlin no longer need to be afraid, in case of sudden illness, of being unable to obtain the highest class of medical attention because of lack of knowledge of the German language. The American Chamber of Commerce here has completed the mobilization of all English speaking doctors in the city who will be available in such emergencies.

Science Enables Mother to Provide Accommodations for Two Babies Instead of One.

Oakland, Cal.—Modern science found unusual application in the provision of accommodations for two infant sons of Doctor and Mrs. Stephens Wyeth of this city, who arrived through the medium of a Caesarian operation.

An X-ray picture taken six weeks ago disclosed that the family was to be enlarged by two and as a result plans were changed and a dual assortment of nursery fittings and wearing apparel was in readiness when the twins made their appearance.

Soldiers Offer Wages to Keep Their Regiment

New York.—The Twenty-second infantry, which opened the war against Germany by seizing German shipping in New York harbor, has been ordered broken up and scattered, in conformity with congressional economy, but the men themselves have offered to give up two months' pay to preserve the personnel of this, one of the oldest regiments of the army.

Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard, commanding the Second corps area, characterized the petition of soldiers as "one of the most remarkable exhibitions of loyalty and esprit de corps that I have ever known."

Boarding House Blossoms

By RUBY DOUGLAS

© 1917, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

She was slim and pale and she occupied the table beside the window in the boarding house. Sometimes the sun slanting in shone on the dull auburn of her hair and turned it into fiery copper.

Drake's table was far back in the shadow of the second dining room. He sat where he was quite unobserved, but from his vantage point he was most observing. He studied each of Mrs. Drew's paying guests while he mechanically fed himself with her indifferently cooked food.

Most often he found himself watching the girl whom he had named Violet. He had given her this name because of her slim, modest shyness, and somehow she stopped to exude a fragrance that was reminiscent of the English violet itself.

Drake never made friends in boarding houses, nor apparently did the girl. Otherwise theirs might have been before this an ordinary speaking acquaintance.

The days had long since gone when landladies could buy a bunch of wallflowers or jonquils for a dime, and in consequence the tables were seldom adorned with anything more decorative than a salt and pepper shaker and the mustard pot.

One day when Drake opened his mail and found a check larger than he had expected from a story inspired by flowers in that dining room he decided to buy some flowers for the landlady. He bought an armful of tawny chrysanthemums and every table in both dining rooms was made beautiful by them.

Drake happened to glance at Violet and his heart gave a bound. She had dipped one of the great blossoms in her lovely hands and was burying her face in it. Then she raised her eyes and looked into its golden depths with an unmistakable love of flowers in her expression. She inhaled the bitter sweetness of it for a moment, sighed as if in reminiscence and then went on with her soup. Drake, too, continued his prosaic task of eating.

Looked Into Its Golden Depths.

"Jolly good thing I didn't get roses," he said to himself. "She might have kissed them right here before this cold audience." He wondered how it would feel to have Violet look deep into his soul as she had looked into the heart of this flower.

That night he brought home six hyacinths and took them to his room under cover of his coat.

Violet usually went for a short walk after her day in business, and it was while she was gone that he slipped the bunch of blossoms through the balcony railing and on her window sill, so that they might greet her when she pulled up her curtains the next morning. Drake's room was next to hers and he could hear her moving about when the windows were up.

He slept well and he believed he dreamed of a slim, auburn-haired girl in a garden of flowers.

The tinkling of the brass rings on the long curtains in the next room brought him to consciousness in the morning. He sat up and listened. He heard a soft little exclamation and was repaid for his gift. She had found the flowers and they had given her delight.

Later, in the dining room, he heard her questioning Mrs. Drew, but that astonished person was as much mystified as was the girl.

Romance had drifted into the boarding house, and Mrs. Drew was as pleased and excited as a cat with her first batch of kittens. But she could not put two and two together. She could not find the happy man.

Easy-going David Drake, the eccentric, quiet author of so many short stories, was the last person she would have suspected.

And Violet? She was only half conscious of having stepped into the world of romance. But she had found a new interest in life. Her eyes took on a warmer glow, her steps became more buoyant and a faint rose flush appeared in her pale cheeks when she entered the boarding house dining room.

Exquisite orange tulips had followed the hyacinths and then happy yellow jonquils. Then, one morning, a great cluster of fragrant, dewy roses of deepest, warmest red greeted her eyes when she pulled aside her curtains. After that she knew that she was truly loved.

Violet had kept all the bulbs and was caring for them until the following spring, when she hoped to be able to plant them in the far-away garden in the South. She had been miserably homesick since she came to the big city to make her living and she longed for the family, the flowers, the birds and all that meant life to her. No one knew just how much this gift of flowers had meant to her nor how wonderfully her soul had responded.

It was getting well into spring and the long, light evenings made it difficult for Drake to get his offerings unseen to her window. His own awnings were up and the partition between the balconies was canvased so as to insure privacy. The girl had planted flowers on her railings and he could see her tending them.

When he sent the two tubs of crimson ramblers to her after this he decided to write a note to accompany them. He was fearful lest the girl might worry about the material side of it—the expenditure. He fabricated as successfully as if he were writing fiction and explained that the overprolific greenhouses of his brother in the country made it nothing at all for him to keep her in the flowers she so obviously loved.

Violet pondered over the note, and more than ever her eyes were dreamy with the wonder of her secret romance. Would it be so wonderful when she met him face to face?

She knew her moment of awakening had come when she entered the dining room one morning and her eyes fell on a drooping bud of begonia in the lapel of David Drake's coat. She blushed brilliantly. He caught her eyes, and as she found her way to her own table she realized how wonderfully woven was the web of her romance. No man, of all whom she had known, could have fitted so adequately into the dream as this quiet writer of short stories.

When she returned to her room she buried her face in the big begonia plant and wrote a note. "I have no way to thank you for all the joy you have brought into my life with your gifts of flowers. The begonia bud must have been broken off to carry a message to you. I am glad it is you who have been so good to me."

Fortunately that night when Violet passed his table Drake was not in his place, and she dropped the scribbled note near his knife.

When he read it he, too, turned a rosy red. He spoke at once with the tablemaid, who, with a broad grin that showed that her sympathetic Irish soul had been touched, carried the tray of food over to the little table by the window. Drake himself followed.

The tablemaid told Mrs. Drew afterward that she had never seen such a look in any one's eyes as had come into the girl's when Mr. Drake sat down at the table opposite her.

After that the petals of the flower of the boarding house romance unfolded one by one until a blushing bride bloomed in all her loveliness.

ECCENTRIC IN ALL THINGS

Poet Shelley a Good Example of "Great Minds to Madness Closely Are Allied."

In Shelley, politics, atheism, love and poetry were all mixed up together. A touch of neurasthenia added to the confusion. In so far, he was only one of the more interesting specimens of humanity. Nevertheless, his eccentricity is a tale that grows in the telling. granted he never could swim, he was a good shot and loved pistol practice all his life, somewhat to the discomfort of those who watched him handle firearms. Hogg says he could fairly glide through a crowd, but would trip over his own feet, once he was alone. His absurd dread of disease has been dwelt on again and again; as, for instance, his catching elephantiasis by rubbing knees all day with an absurdly fat woman who sat opposite to him in a stage coach. Not till he had been examined and reassured by a physician did he recover. Members of his entourage write vaguely of "spasms"—Trelawny blames laudanum, and implies that he was too constantly haunted by his own thoughts, in spite of incessant reading and writing. Peacock cites the vegetarian diet and concludes with his famous cure—"two mutton chops, well peppered." Hogg thinks he should have been a lawyer, "for he had the most acute intellect of any man I ever knew"—poetry was the evil genius of his life.—Stewart Mitchell in the Dial.

RICH FINDS IN DUST HEAPS

Sifters of London Rubbish Make Good Money in Occupation That Would Appeal to Few.

Lovers of Dickens are not likely to forget Noddy Boffin, the golden dustman in "Our Mutual Friend," and the heaps of dust that were his fortune. Not so many years ago there was many a mountain of rubbish, cinders and various unsavory objects to be found about, and sometimes in London itself.

There are many stories of the wonderful finds that have been made by dust sifters in those heaps, and one of the fraternity named Mary Collins, who lived in the neighborhood of Lisson Grave, gave some curious evidence before a police magistrate when she appeared to charge a woman with robbery. The prisoner had stolen a bag that contained one coral necklace, another with a pearl clasp, several handsome brooches, five gold seals, some gold rings and shirt pins, broken bits of gold and silver, and other articles of less value.

In reply to the magistrate the prosecutrix stated that she had found the property among the dust, and that people who followed her trade found almost every small article that could be mentioned. She was employed by a dust contractor who allowed his employees 16 cents per load for sifting, in addition to all the spoons and other articles that they might find among the dust. One woman had followed her occupation for eight years and had done so well with her "finds" that she built herself a house at a cost of $1,500. In addition, she showed a cash box in which were thirty-nine sovereigns, two five-pound notes and several guineas and half-sovereigns.

Limestone Formation.

Over nearly all the bottom of the sea, on the tops and slopes of the mountains, and the valleys and the plains beneath the Atlantic is an ooze or sludge of unknown thickness, gray in color and clayey in texture, formed by microscopic animals casting off their shells. These little animals of many species all have hard scientific names. There are countless trillions and quardrillions of them in a cubic mile of water and they have been living, shedding their shells and dying since before the Mesozoic age or the "Middle Age," when mammals, fish and birds made their appearance on the earth. That may have been a million or a trillion years ago. These mites secrete lime which they obtain from the water, form it into a shell and shed it and make another shell. It was these little fellows who made all the limestone in the world. They laid down deep beds of this same gray ooze in the bottom of the oceans. The waters receded, land appeared and that gray ooze hardened into limestone.—Exchange.

Opportunity Overlooked.

"It may be possible to communicate with spirits."

"I'm not denying that."

"Then why poke fun at the mediums?"

They show such poor judgment. A visitor from the spirit world who cared to make a speech could keep an audience of thousands spellbound in their seats for hours, but about all a spirit ever says is, 'I'm very happy here.'"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

By Special Request.

"How is Mr. Grumpson's repartee?"

"Not bad. I heard him make a snappy retort to a traffic policeman, and it was so good he was asked to repeat it the next day in police court."

Shelf of Blood Maddens Bull.

Medina, O.—A bull which escaped from the L. May slaughter house, near Akron, went on a rampage after smelling the blood of a butchered companion. It gored three dogs, snapped off a hundred or more saplings and broke down three barbed wire and two rail fences. Deputy Sheriff Scotty Ingerton and Edward Hutchinson worked over two hours before they subdued and then killed the bull. The animal didn't die until after three shots had been fired into it.

Dog's Howls Disturb Funeral.

Jacksonville, Fla.—A collie dog was one of the chief mourners at the funeral here the other day of its master, J. J. D. Crabb, an eleven-year-old boy, who was killed recently when a tunnel the boy and his playmates had dug caved in. The collie, during the funeral service in the chapel, took a place under the coffin, where his howls were so frequent as to interrupt the proceedings.

Man and Wife to Lead Adam and Eve Existence

Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Sutter, of Boston, Mass., are ready to go into the Maine woods to prove to a modern world that a man and woman can exist on their own resources without the aids of civilization. They will enter the wilderness, leaving clothes, food, fire, and weapons behind them. Sutter is twenty-seven years old and his wife but twenty-three. The experiment is to continue six weeks, during which time they will live in the dense woods, now uninhabited except by wild beasts.

"25% Cook and 75% Oven!"

That's the way a well-known culinary expert recently interpreted the secret of good cookery.

Good ovens make good cooks—poor ovens make poor cooks. Every woman knows how true this is.

So the big point to consider, when purchasing a gas range, is the oven.

Estate
GAS RANGES
Bake with Fresh Air

There are no openings in the sides of the oven—no chance for the products of combustion to enter where the food is cooking. Better baking and roasting, sweeter and more wholesome, are thus achieved. And absolute heat uniformity in every part of the oven is assured.

Additional Baking Capacity, Too!

A 16-inch Estate oven actually has the baking capacity of an ordinary 18-inch oven. That's because baking can be placed closely against the walls. In the ordinary range, with openings in the side linings, there is at least one inch of oven space, at each side, which cannot be utilized.

Estate Gas Ranges are made in a wide variety of styles, sizes and finishes, to suit all requirements. Several models are enameled throughout, and some of the cabinet ranges can be had with or without an oven heat control.

COMMUNITY DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

Vacation Bible School will be offered the boys and girls of the Hilltop this summer by a corps of able teachers and a program crammed full of good things. The school will be held at the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church but it is for all children of the community regardless of their church affiliation or whether they are in Sunday School or not. The school begins the second week in July and will run for five full weeks. A principal has been secured who will ably direct the activities of the school. Miss Hazel Linville who is getting training for the work at Canton, Ohio, this week will also be a teacher in the school and Miss Evangeline Horn, Normal School trained kindergartner will take charge of the little ones. Parents who want the best place to send their children can not fail to use the advantages of this school which combines worship work, and play with extra large doses of good things thrown in.

Boys will be taught manual work and to make cord hammocks and other useful articles, girls will learn to sew and make baskets and raffia articles and the younger children of the kindergarten will make little toys and cardboard work.

Bible stories will be told every day and memory work done so that each child will learn a great deal of Scripture by memory. Hymns of the Church that all love to sing will be sung daily and the program of games and outings will include swimming and baseball, picnics and field days and all that goes to give a reasonable amount of pleasure along with the study-work.

There will be NO CHARGE this year for the school. Everything is absolutely free to all children who come between the ages of 4 and 14.

The teaching is non-sectarian and only Bible material is used with the hymns and habit talks make up a program of real religious education which no parent can overlook for his children. Boys and girls COME! Parents send your children. Free. Free.

The court ruled that she must remove from her present home in a locality where much moonshining has been brought to light.

American-Made Cheese Now Invading Switzerland

Washington.—Switzerland, the home of the cheese, is being invaded by the American product, according to a report from Consul Murphy at Lucerne, the Commerce department announced recently.

Constant improvement of American types of Swiss cheese, he said, has had much to do with their introduction into Switzerland and other new markets and the Swiss cheese has had to make room for its foreign relative.

"Macaroni" Has Passed.

The old American use of the word "macaroni" has passed. In Revolutionary times the term signified "swell," "elegant," "high toned." In an age when all elegant things came from Italy, the exquisite in clothing and manners was complimented with the designation "macaroni." When Yankee Doodle put a feather in his hat, in order to look like a dandy, he "called it macaroni." The crack regiment of the Continental army, recruited in Maryland and Virginia, was called "the Macaronis."

That usage is forgotten. By some strange chance, a "macarone" in Italy itself is a dunce, a dolt.

East India Turbans.

In India the turban is worn to protect the head from excessive heat, the thickness varying according to the climate in each locality. These turbans are made of cloth of from 20 to 40 feet long and from 12 to 18 inches wide, and are wrapped around the head in endless variety, according to rank and taste.

There are a number of accessories worn in combination with the turban. One beautiful ornament, limited to the use of kings, princes and nobles, is a beautifully embroidered velvet band about six inches long and two broad, into the middle of which is inserted a gold plate set with precious stones. This is worn obliquely in front of the turban and the band is tied behind by means of a silk thread fastened to each end.

The Answer Ted Received

By CLARISSA MACKIE

© 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"You wish to end our—engagement?" faltered Elizabeth Deering, her startled eyes fixed on Teddy Drummond's stern young face. "Why?"

"You are too rich, Elizabeth," he answered grimly.

She laughed. "Too rich? You are only joking, then, Ted—"

"I mean it, dear. Listen a moment, and you will understand what I am trying to tell you. I am the assistant superintendent at the Deering mills—I am getting $2,400 a year—in two years more, I may be superintendent—perhaps general manager, if I prove myself worthy; then, I will be that much better off! I am talking about now—I want to marry, and yet the home I can provide is merely one of the pretty houses in Forest Park. We might keep one maid—possibly none at all; I have a second-hand motorcar; my wife will have to work about the house—" he paused and looked at her very tenderly.

"Yes?" she said breathlessly, "Go on, Ted."

"You—the girl I love and the girl I am engaged to marry, are the richest woman in Pedersville—you have inherited the mills—you can afford to live where and how you please, you have been accustomed to plenty of servants, beautiful clothes, many motorcars, society—everything—"

"Not quite everything, Ted," the girl interrupted gently. "My mother died when I was a little girl and my dear father left me only last year. I am much alone save for Aunt Diana and cousins."

"I know—I know, dear—but I am trying to make you understand that I cannot afford to give you the luxuries you are accustomed to, and I cannot accept those things from a rich wife

Arose and Held Out Her Hand.

So—I have thought it would be best if I withdrew and left you free to marry into your own set—hang it all, Elizabeth, you must know what I mean!" He flung around and stared out of the window.

For a long minute she gazed at him with luminous eyes, then she arose and held out her hand. "Very well, Ted. I will think it over—and give you my answer in two weeks. Will you come to me then, if I send for you?"

"I will come to you from the ends of the earth whenever you send for me," he declared passionately, as he jammed his hat over his eyes and left the house.

Elizabeth watched him until he disappeared around the corner. She looked down at the modest sapphire and diamond engagement ring on her finger, and suddenly lifted it to her lips. How sturdily independent he was, this poor lover of hers! How proud she was of him—how they two could work together for future success; suppose she waited until he had made good, had attained the management of the mills—they would be several years older—and years are long!

That afternoon Elizabeth went and had a long talk with her guardians.

The two weeks passed rapidly for Teddy Drummond. He felt that the hour of his doom was approaching. No girl brought up as Elizabeth had been, nursed in the lap of luxury, could hesitate about marrying a poor man. Of course when she had accepted him, they had both been madly in love, and down underneath her knowledge of his poverty must have always crept the comforting thought that she had enough money to make things right. Now, she understood that he could not ride in his wife's motorcar, live in the houses she bought, admire the lovely clothes she wore—while he perhaps merely paid for his own wardrobe and cigars. "Never!" he pounded his fist on his desk.

"Did you speak, Mr. Drummond?" piped a timid stenographer.

"What is the date?" he inquired mildly enough.

"The 30th," she answered.

"Great Jove, this is the day!" He looked wildly about his desk for some overlooked missive for she was going to send for him. He found it, feeling the old delicious thrill at sight of her handwriting.

"Dear Teddy: Drive your car around to 7 Primrose terrace at four o'clock and pick me up. I promised in answer today. Elizabeth."

After that he was very quiet for the rest of the afternoon, and at ten minutes before the hour he went down and looked dismally at his very good-looking roadster. "It will cut some figure among the handsome motors of Elizabeth's friends. Now, let me think—Primrose terrace is in Forest Park—must be having tea with some of her impecunious friends."

At four he was ringing the doorbell at number seven, a very delightful gray stucco house with charming windows and a pretty garden. In the rear was a wee garage and a bit of green lawn.

Elizabeth opened the door, clad in her pretty afternoon frock. "They do not keep a servant, so I just answered the bell. I knew it must be you," she said, ushering him through a small hall into a lovely living room, furnished plainly but with such a home atmosphere that poor Teddy longed to cry out and say, "This is the house of my dreams—cannot you come and live with me here?"

"How do you like it, Ted?" she asked suddenly, watching him.

"Great," he breathed sharply, and then he turned around and took her hands in his. "It was a house like this, Elizabeth—I could offer you one like this, but it is not enough—"

"How do you know that?" she laughed softly.

"Don't tease me, dear—I was to have your answer today."

She swept her arms wide and looked at him radiantly.

"This is my answer, Teddy. This house and all it contains are yours or they will be when you have paid Mr. Morris the amount I have spent—you can afford to do that—refund to my guardian the money I have spent in furnishing our home—I have made an arrangement with my guardians that all the income from the mills will go to Aunt Diana and my cousins for several years—until you are as rich as you think you ought to be! And—now—now—"

"Elizabeth, you are giving up your money, your cars, your—"

"Everything—beloved—so that I may come to you! Some day, when we have more wisdom, we will better know how to adjust things—now we are young and work is waiting for us to do. Will you look at the house now and then drive me home so that I may talk to auntie about my trousseau and the wedding?"

SOLD TOBACCO AS MEDICINE

Old-Time English Apothecary Held Strong Views as to the Virtues of the "Filthy Weed."

Old-time apothecaries in England used to sell for medicinal purposes not only strong wines, but also tobacco. John Archer, physician-in-ordinary to Charles II, kept apothecaries' shops in various parts of London, and sold tobacco at all of them. Archer advised his patients to smoke, holding that tobacco purifies the air from infectious malignancy by its fragrancy, sweetens the breath, strengthens the brain and memory, and revives the sight to admiration." He charged two shillings an ounce for his tobacco, which was supposed to possess special virtues, "to be perceived after taking one pipe."

Oddly enough, in 1877, when ready-made Virginia cigarettes were first placed on the London market, the apothecaries reverted to their old practice of selling tobacco. The ordinary tobacconists would not stock these cigarettes, thinking there would be no sale for them, so the London agent of the American firm which exported them offered to pay the cost of a tobacconist's license for every chemist who undertook to stock his wares. They caught on so well with smokers that the tobacconists were soon compelled to stock them, and eventually the chemists found it not worth their while to do so.

Wrestling With a Leopard.

An extraordinary story of a struggle between a man and a leopard comes from the Tanganyika territory. Mr. J. Turnley, together with a Major Bradstock, at the request of a native chief, set a trap for a leopard which had terrorized a village in the Kilossa district. The gun in the trap exploded and a native reported that the leopard had been killed; but on the approach of the party the animal sprang from the trap and, together with Mr. Turnley, disappeared into a six foot pit. When Major Bradstock reached the pit he found Mr. Turnley, who is a well built man, wrestling with the leopard. For some moments it was impossible to render assistance, but finally, acting on the instructions of Major Bradstock, Mr. Turnley forced the leopard at arm's length from him until a risky shot killed the animal. Mr. Turnley was badly mauled, but is expected to recover.—London Times.

PEAK OF CRIME WAVE REACHED

American Bar Association Committee Expects Steady Drop in Unlawful Deeds.

REFORMS ARE RECOMMENDED

Respect for Law Shows Increase When Industry Picks Up—Growing Contempt for the Law Not Laid to the War Alone.

Washington.—The peak in the world-wide crime wave that followed the war has been reached, and from this time there may be expected a drop in the number of murders, holdups and similar outrages, in the opinion of the special committee appointed by the American Bar association to study the reasons for the lessening of public regard for the law.

At the same time the committee believes the crime situation, particularly in the United States, is such as to warrant reforms that would aid in the administration of justice. To this end the committee is formulating a program with a view of recommending it at the next annual meeting of the American Bar association at San Francisco in August. These in all probability will be the essential recommendations:

To Offer Suggestions.

Collection by the federal government of crime statistics, so that the extent of lawlessness may be fully known, which is not now the case, when the administration of police laws is entirely in the control of the states and their subdivisions.

Restricted sales of automatic pistols, with which the vast majority of crimes are committed, their manufacture and distribution to be largely under the control of the War department, so that pistols may be kept from the criminally inclined.

Thorough revision of the grand jury system, so that the administration of justice may be more rapid, and a change in the laws so that criminals may not take refuge behind technicalities in indictments.

Institution of some method whereby the potential criminal may be segregated, through the machinery of the criminal courts, which themselves are in need of co-ordination.

Vigorous reform in the jail system, primarily to prevent first offenders from failing in with hardened criminals, so that jails will not be so much a breeding place for crime.

Speedy enactment of a federal law to make the advocacy of a revolutinary overthrow of the United States government a crime, this intended primarily to put a stop to the propaganda being spread by those of foreign birth or of foreign parentage.

Other Reforms Asked.

In addition to these chief recommendations it is expected that the committee will advise that the states provide for the payment of criminals for their labor in prisons, so that their families may be held together and not become public charges, and that the lawyers adopt a code that they will not neglect their duties in obtaining justice because of the inability of those seeking counsel to pay the price—in other words to get to the law is a luxury only for a privileged class.

The committee held hearings in Washington in March and another series in Chicago in April. It went to the Illinois state prison at Joliet, where prisoners were interviewed. Hearings are to be continued in New York city. Among those who have appeared to give testimony, in addition to the prisoners, have been judges of criminal courts, superintendents of reformatories, criminologists, lawyers and wardens.

It is the opinion of the committee that while the war was in a large part responsible for the crime wave there are other reasons for a growing contempt for the law, chief of which is lax enforcement and the long route the criminal has to travel from the time of committing a crime until he is punished.

In the opinion of lawyers studying the situation, one of the chief factors responsible for the crime wave has been unemployment. It is for this reason the assertion is made that in all probability the peak of the crime wave has passed.

The committee believes vigorous reforms are required if there is to be a restoration of respect for the law.

PROFITS BY CLOCK'S ERROR

Missourian Misses Train and Returns to Restaurant to Replace Timepiece Gratis.

Poplar Bluff, Mo.—Trains, like time, wait for no man. And that's why a local restaurateur is $5 richer. It also is why the visitor who paid him the "jack" lumbered swiftly afoot over the railroad tracks out of this town.

The stranger entered the lunchroom, glanced at a clock on the wall, compared the time with his railroad timetable, and sat down to eat. He had ten minutes to catch his train—by the clock on the wall. He paid his check and departed. But he came back, somewhat peeved.

"Friend," he said to the lunchroom owner, "your clock is wrong. It caused me to miss a very important engagement. Take this $5 and buy a new one. I was on my way to get married—and now I'll have to walk."

Excavations in Egypt Disclose Some Interesting Information Regarding the System of Government of Egyptians.

London.—The idea of maintaining a government by killing off the members of the opposition is very ancient, according to Hinders Petrie, the learned professor of Egyptology at University college here. In an illustrated lecture at the college recently Professor Petrie described the latest excavations at Abydos and elsewhere in Egypt.

Ancient Tomb Explored.

He described the discovery of some tombs of the time of the First Dynasty. These were made in rows some 300 feet long and were covered by six feet of sand and rubbish. Very little stone work was found, owing to the plundering that had gone on in the past, but a number of fine alabaster jars were unearthed. There were also found 60 or 70 skeletons and 80 skulls. In most cases the body had been buried with the knees drawn up to the chest, and in the grave there had been placed small jars containing grains of wheat for the sustenance of the dead.

Among the royal tombs, said the lecturer, there was evidence that many courtiers had been killed off at one time on the death of the king. This was an excellent system of preventing unstable government, for by making sure of the safety of the king statesmen made sure of their own. The result was that the kings had very long reigns indeed. The courtiers who were killed off were stunned by a blow from a sandbag and then buried. One or two of the victims, it appeared, had not been very dexterously dealt with, for the position of their unearthed skeletons strongly suggested that they had struggled to get out of their graves after burial.

Some Finely-Carved Lions.

Among other discoveries were some finely-carved ivory lions, used as pieces in a game played on a circular board, a comb of ivory, many copper tools, including the earliest form of a saw (a knife with a roughly-knotched edge) and many flint implements. In one grave was found a quantity of skeletons of cats.

A photograph of great interest was that of a hermit's dwelling in a cave at the head of a fissure in a stony valley. The external view of the place exactly represented the entrance to a dug-out in a front-line trench.

ITALIANS GRANTED RUSS LAND

Company Gets Concession of 25,000 Acres in North Caucasus for Twenty-Four Years.

Rome, Italy.—The Italian-Russian commercial treaty agreed upon at Genoa last month contains a clause whereby Russia grants to an Italian company 25,000 acres in the north Caucasus or at the mouth of the River Don or the River Dnieper, at the choice of the concessionnaires. The agreement is for twenty-four years, with privilege of renewal for a like period.

The company must give Russia 15 per cent of the cereals raised on the land and from 15 to 20 per cent of the cattle. Another percentage is to be agreed upon for special products of the land.

The lessee may export half the products; the remainder may be purchased by the Russian government within one month from the time of harvest. Half the laborers may be imported, but half must be Russian.

The concession must be transformed into a regular contract by October 10, otherwise it becomes void.

BEAR WHIPS TWO SWIMMERS

Sends Minnesota Lumberjacks Who Try to Drown Him to the Hospital.

Hibbing, Minn.—A battle with a bear in deep water was described by two woodsmen who came to Hibbing out of the woods along Sturgeon river, to get medical treatment. The men—Ole Hendrickson and James Kinney—swam up behind the bear and tried to pull him under by his legs to drown him.

They held on for ten minutes, in which they were cuffed, bruised, scratched and half drowned. They had to let go and the bear swam on.

ART CENTER FOR NEW YORK

$15,000,000 to Be Expended on Group of Artistic Buildings Facing Central Park.

New York.—Work on a musical and art center for New York city, to cost $15,000,000, facing Central park at Seventh avenue, and extending back two blocks to Fifty-seventh street, is expected to begin soon. It is proposed to erect an opera house, a conservatory of music and a building to care for the plastic and fine arts. The city will furnish the land and a citizens' committee will finance the buildings.

TAKE PRINTS OF NOSES

Bertillon Expertry Applied to Blooded Cows Proves Success.

Experiments Conducted at the Minnesota University Farm, in Which 2,000 Prints Were Taken, Proves No Two Are Alike.

St. Paul, Minn.—Bertillon expertry in the purebred cattle industry, an innovation in the identification of the animals by "nose prints," is the latest subject cattle men will have to learn with the spreading of the practice among live stock men.

Experimented with last October at the university farm here by W. E. Peterson, superintendent of official testing in Minnesota, at the suggestion of O. H. Baker of the American Jersey Cattle club, the new identification system has acted as a substitute for the unsatisfactory branding methods.

More than 2,000 prints have been taken and are on file, and no two have been found alike. When the suggestion had reached the ears of many of the leading cattle breeders it was regarded as a humorous bit of "air talk," but, like the days subsequent to the developing of the world generally, the past few months has proved the efficacy of the new identification system.

The procedure in making nose prints is simple. The cow's head is taken under left arm, its nose wiped and ink applied with a soaked stamping pad. A small board to which mimeograph paper has been attached takes the imprint. The lower edge of the paper is started at the base of the cow's upper lip and with slight, even pressure, rolled upward. The resultant nose print is a permanent record, as noses do not change with time.

According to Mr. Peterson, positive identification of animals is necessary for several reasons. Substitution of two scrub cows would have little significance, he said, but if a pure-bred cow should be replaced by a mediocre one, the substitution might mean thousands of dollars. Again, if a fresh cow of similar appearance were to replace a cow on official test a serious fraud would be perpetrated.

Many insurance concerns have solicited information about it, Superintendent Peterson stated. Under the present arrangement the live stock owners may insure eight or ten animals and in many cases with the death of an animal, insurance is collected, regardless of whether or not one of the insured cattle was the dead one, according to Mr. Peterson. With nose prints, the companies will have positive proof.

"Substitution is also possible in tuberculosis testing," the testing superintendent continued. "In a case where a valuable animal reacts to the test and is condemned, ear tags may be swapped and another animal of less value may be killed, while the reactor is saved to spread the disease to other animals."

Changing Scenes by Changing Lights

If you place a red ball on the grass and look at it through a piece of red glass, the ball will stand out plainly, but the grass will look black. Use a green glass, and exactly the opposite happens. This is the principle of the "spectrum analysis" method of scene-changing which has been tried successfully at several theaters. The setting of the stage represents, perhaps the interior of a room. A switch is touched, a different colored light falls on the scene, and instead of a room you see a garden full of trees and flowers. Both views are painted on the scenery, but they are done in contrasting colors. Red lights are thrown onto it, causing the red colors to stand out, whilst the greens of the garden seem look merely like black shadows. When the switch is touched the light changes to green, which brings out the greens and renders the reds almost invisible.

Bruce Balcome's Rival

By ANNE RICHARDS

© 1932, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

It was an attractive room, this nest in the big apartment building which was home to her, and one knew that she loved it, seeing the affectionate look with which she gave it greeting. Throwing her hat and coat over the couch, she accepted the invitation of the bright-cushioned gray wicker chair and opened the letter which she had picked up on entering.

"My Dear Miss Denslow—A friend of mine, a writer, is to be in Cleveland for a few weeks, and I have given him a letter of introduction to you, knowing that you will furnish him the best there is in the stenographic line, and also that the acquaintance will be mutually agreeable. Bruce Balcome is a most interesting companion, a man I know you will like.

"Trusting that success is still with you, I am, yours very cordially,

"RUSSELL WEBSTER."

"Russell Webster does not know that business belongs on Commerce street, and has no place in this sky tower of mine," and, laying the letter on the table, she commenced the preparation of her evening meal, a task she enjoyed as thoroughly as any housekeeper with all the appurtenances of housekeeping.

Eleanor had left home some years before, resolved to build up a business as public stenographer, and success had rewarded her efforts. She now had a business that kept mind and hands well occupied. For several years she had lived in a boarding house. Never safe from intrusion, even when in the supposedly sacred precincts of her own room, her dream had been of a cosy apartment where no one could intrude.

Then, too, she longed for the dainty furnishings which are not found in a boarding house. For Miss Eleanor loved two things, artistic surroundings and solitude. She mingled with crowds during the day, and when night came found her own companionship the most congenial.

Three months previous to this time her dreams had taken material form, and the novelty had not yet worn off the pretty apartment which she entered each night with a sense of almost childish delight. The tiny kitchen was a playhouse, the gas range a toy stove that would do real cooking, and the mistress of it all was as proficient in the art of preparing tempting meals as in the work of her down-town world. A gate-leg table with snowy cloth and blue china, a low bowl of pink roses in the center, relieved the brown rolls and butter, juicy steak, potatoes and apple jelly, borne in on a tray from the kitchen.

The forenoon was passing, typewriters clicked and Eleanor was busy at her desk when the door opened quietly to admit a young man of dignified bearing.

"Miss Denslow?"

"Yes."

Eleanor was on her dignity in business hours.

"I have a letter of introduction from Mr. Russell Webster."

So little thought did Eleanor give to business during home hours, she had forgotten the letter of last evening. She read the note, asking, "Can I be of service to you?"

"I would like to dictate a few letters and wish to make an appointment for each forenoon. May I have a private room?"

"Certainly, Miss Folsom." She spoke to an assistant, "Mr. Balcome would like to dictate."

There was a trace of disappointment on the countenance of Mr. Bruce Balcome as he followed Miss Folsom. For several days Miss Folsom was assigned to him. This did not suit him in the least, for he had been told that he would find Eleanor Denslow a congenial companion, and he had looked forward to meeting her. He had been attracted at once and congratulated himself that he had brought a letter of introduction, so that the acquaintance might progress rapidly. But it did not progress readily. It did not progress at all. The acquaintance had commenced with a bow and a few words, and a bow without the few words was all he was getting now. This would not do. He was a young man of determination, and the dignified aloofness of Miss Eleanor served only to make him more desirous of knowing the young lady inside that business shell.

The next morning he opened the door and walked directly across to Miss Denslow, greeting her with a smiling "Good morning. I hope you are disposed to grant a favor today. I wish to get out an unusual amount of work before tomorrow. Would it be possible for me to engage your services this evening? I can always do better work when the noise of the day is stilled." With a calm exterior he awaited her reply. Eleanor heard his request with surprise and looked at him closely, trying to see if there was anything more than business in this suggestion.

"I am not in the habit of extending my office hours into the evening."

The answer was neither what he hoped for nor what he feared. Eleanor never knew how it was that she consented to return to the office that evening. Neither did she know how it had come to be a regular thing for her to dine with Mr. Balcome twice a week, returning to the office for an evening's work on his book.

The time was not all spent in dictation. Many interesting points came up to be discussed. Of course, when they stayed late Mr. Balcome could not allow her to go home alone. One evening they stopped work earlier than usual. Eleanor did not know that he had so planned it. When they reached the apartment, Mr. Balcome said:

"It is too late to go to the theater and too early to go home. I think you will have to be kind, and invite me to come in, Miss Denslow."

She could not refuse, so for the first time the gray and rose nest was invaded by a man. That night Eleanor sat long in the gay cushioned chair, thinking back over the days to that first time when Bruce Balcome had walked into her office and into her life. She could not remember when she had commenced to think of him as other than one of the many customers who went in and out of her office. How had she let down the bars that separated her business and her home life?

A few nights later she found a box of roses at her door. Burying her face in their sweetness, she spied a note.

"My Dear Miss Denslow—I am going home tomorrow."

She read no further. "Going home—going home—without a word." She clenched the note tightly in her hand. "Then he does not care. And I thought—I thought—" She dropped her head on the table, her feelings too deep for tears. Was it true? Had she read it right? Slowly she raised her head, dreading, yet longing, to see the words again. Her fingers loosened on the note. Yes, but there was more. Perhaps he explained. She glanced along the lines:

"Your assistance has meant much to me, and I shall miss our evenings together. My hope is that you, too, will miss them, and that your evenings will be so lonely you will be ready to give me a warmer welcome when I return than you did at our first meeting. I look forward to spending next Saturday evening with you, and I shall not come to dictate, but, if your smile of welcome invites, to ask for something. Yours always, BRUCE BALCOME."

"Yours." He had underlined it. Had their companionship meant as much to him as it had to her? She would know soon, but how could she wait? It was a waiting time filled with glowing hopes. She walked home at night as in a dream, cooked her dinner in a dream, and as she sat down to it pictured a blue-eyed companion opposite.

Saturday came at last, and even the room itself seemed to wear an air of expectancy. The pink rosebuds which showed their blushes against the soft gray of the vase must have been responsible for the rose flush on the face of the room's occupant, a flush which deepened as steps sounded outside and a firm hand knocked at the door. She could not move to open it. Another knock, then a voice. "Eleanor," and, as she drew the door back, the dream figure that had been tenanting her room vanished as Bruce Balcome stood before her, a question in his eyes.

"Eleanor, I hope you have been lonely this past week, as horribly lonely as I have been."

Her eyes spoke for her as they looked into his, and he drew her to him closely.

"Dearest, do you know what a frigidly cold greeting you gave me when I first met you. As a punishment I am going to compel you to a lifetime of greetings of this kind," and he lifted her face to his in a greeting such as only lovers know.

Two months later Eleanor stood in the rose and gray nest alone, for the last time.

"Goodby, little nest. I loved you, but you have a rival. He has stolen me away from you. I am sorry to leave you, but, oh, so glad to go with him, anywhere."

The "Docter" Wine.

How many have heard of the famous Moselle wine for invalids, called the "doctor?" It got its name about six hundred years ago from Boemund, archbishop of Treves, who was ill of a fever and given up by the doctors. Then into his castle one day marched a sturdy farmer with a little cask of wine on his shoulder from his three-cornered vineyard at Berncastel. "Whoso drinks of this wine must straightway be well of fever," he announced, and the sick man begged for a drink of it, liked it, took more and got well. "I will never be without that best doctor in mine old age," said the thankful archbishop and left order that 20 casks of that useful wine should go into his cellar every year afterward, for sick purposes.

TOWN FIGHTING TERMITES PEST

White Ants From Tropics Threaten Destruction to Houses in Clinton, Ill.

HONEYCOMB CEMENT BLOCKS

Campaign of Extermination, in Which State University Is Assisting, Is Being Vigorously Pushed—Insects Are Plague in Africa.

Bloomington, Ill.—The millions of white ants, known as termites, whose powerful mandibles honeycombing even cement blocks, threatens destruction to houses in Clinton, are extremely rare in the United States. The insects were first noticed in the home of C. T. Sprague. Later they were found in myriads in the new home of C. F. Weid, just completed at a cost of $15,000 and one of the finest in the town. Other residences are also overrun with the pests and it has become necessary to organize a campaign of extermination.

Prof. J. W. Finley of the biological department of the university of Illinois was appealed to and has been engaged in applying various chemicals which were believed to be fatal and probably effective in destroying the entire community of unwelcome marauders. A mixture of carbo-soda and other ingredients was applied to all sections of the houses affected. Weather-boarding was ripped off, hardwood floors removed and walls opened in order to reach the nests of the insects. Great quantities of creosote were applied and this mixture liberaly sprinkled over the premises, in the cellar and every other place likely to be the retreat of the neuropters, as the termite ant is scientifically known.

Are a Plague in Africa.

The scientists are loath to believe that these ants have become numerous and destructive in this country. They have been a plague in Africa and other tropical countries. Various types build mounds ten to twenty feet in height which serve as homes, many chambered and with winding galleries leading to nurseries and storehouses for food.

When attacking houses, they soon reduce the thickest timbers to a mere shell. In the case of the houses in Clinton the oak floors were honeycombed as completely as the softest pine. Skeptics who scoffed at the report that the ants were able to bore their way through the cement-block foundation had to admit, after an inspection, that the reports were true.

It is presumed that the ants migrated from swamp land or timbered sections adjacent to the city. It was not previously known that the insects existed in any considerable quantity, nor was their destructiveness ever reported in the past. They appear to have moved in one vast army and take possession of certain houses, overrunning every portion and forcing the occupants to seek shelter with neighbors.

Owing to the fecundity of the pests it is feared that they will produce myriads of new colonies unless the campaign of extermination is entirely successful. For this reason every effort is being made to dispatch the last of the visitants, and the application of the creosote and other destroying agencies will not be spared. In fact, creosote is being purchased by the barrel and is being liberally applied to all portions of the houses affected by the insect visitors. If this is not entirely effective, sulphurous gas and chlorine may be utilized.

In Five Classes.

According to the scientists, the termites are divided into five classes—males, females, workers, neuters and soldiers. The workers, neuters and soldiers appear to be imperfectly developed females. The males and perfect females have four wings which are long and nearly equal and which are frequently suddenly cast off before the termination of their life, but the greater part of the community consists of wingless workers. The soldiers are larger than the neuters and have very large mandibles, which they are always ready to use upon any assault. In tropical countries they are said to be useful in destroying decaying animal or vegetable matter. It is said that they even attack and destroy large animals when pressed by hunger and when their natural food is scarce.

Experts at the university confess that they have no record of the termites in any considerable number in the United States until the case at Clinton was called to their attention. The black ant has long been numerous in central Illinois, but so far as known this is the first instance where the termite of the tropics appeared in menacing numbers or have inflicted such heavy loss.

Batted Ball Turns Up Loot.

Chester, Pa.—A cache containing a large quantity of stolen clothing, jewelry, silverware and shoes was discovered the other day when a ball batted by Edward Farley, a boy, rolled under the Baltimore & Ohio railroad station platform here. The police, after a check, said the loot had been stolen from the residence of Mrs. J. C. Culbert and other residences and stores in the northeastern part of the city recently. A maid formerly employed by Mrs. Culbert, Archie Thomas and Benjamin Temple are under arrest.

SAILOR HAS ENOUGH

Quits His Job Cuddling Boa Constrictors on Ship.

Walking Deck With Seasick Gibbons and Valeting Elephants and Other Products of Jungle Abjured by Seaman.

New York.—Johann Schultz, a thoroughly American citizen of German birth, quit his job as deckhand on the steamship Hansa, which recently arrived at Pier 86, North river. He said he would take his chances in a poor labor market rather than spend another day on a ship carrying eight elephants, seven baboons (man-killing, of course), twenty-five assorted snakes—boa constrictors, pythons, anacondas, hooded cobras and Senegambian ham varmints; 100 non-man-killing apes, 150 birds, including parrots, love birds and three long-legged fowl of the genus Kugus from Burma.

"I'm tired of valeting elephants," said Mr. Schultz. "I had to cuddle boa constrictors in my arms and croon them to sleep at night, and I've had enough of it. You don't know what life on the bounding wave is until you've had to walk the deck with a seasick gibbon or calm the fears of a bull cobra. Yes, you may announce that Jack Schultz has quit the sea game, and add that any one who wants a man to take tender care of his or her geranium beds or yearns to engage a mild-mannered watchman might do worse than to look me up."

The Hansa's cargo of jungleers are consigned to Louis Ruhe, dealer in such merchandise.

According to Mr. Ruhe's representative at the pier, Louis J. Beck, the long-legged fowls of the genus Kagus are the first of their kind to arrive in America. Mr. Beck and Andrew Myers, another representative of Mr. Ruhe, say that Albert Meems, a mighty hunter, corralled the menagerie in the Burmese jungles. It took him more than a year to do it, they say.

DOESN'T LIKE CASTOR OIL

Poor old Gato, the 211-year-old youngster at the Kansas City zoo needed medicine. In fact, he needs it every spring. And he doesn't like the particular medicine, castor oil, any more than humans. So his keeper takes no chances and ropes Gato in such a way that there will be no resulting casualty.

ESKIMOS INCREASE TOO FAST

West Coast of Greenland Imperiled by Growth of Population—Causes Lively Dispute.

Copenhagen.—The growth in the number of Eskimos on the west coast of Greenland of late has made the existence of the surplus population somewhat precarious. The old plan of transporting a certain number of families to Scoresby sound, on the east coast, where the only other settlement is Angmagsalik, is now likely to be adopted, as an expedition to investigate the place may start this year, and perhaps has already started.

Although the scheme is generally approved, disagreement has arisen as to who is to put it into execution. It lies between the originator of the scheme, M. Olrik of the Royal Greenland Trade, in collaboration with the well-known arctic explorer, M. Ejnar Mikkelsen, or the two young brothers Porsild, who, as sons of the director of the scientific station on Disco island, have passed the greater part of their life in Greenland.

WILD ANIMALS DYING OFF

Steady Decrease in Number Is Due to Eagles and Predatory Beasts, Says U. S. Forester.

Denver, Colo.—A steady decrease in the number of wild animals that roam the plains, mountains and forests of Colorado is noted in a report made to the United States forest service here by Assistant District Forester John Hatton.

Despite the fact that many of the animals are protected by state game laws, elk are practically the only ones in the Colorado national forests that have shown an increase in the past year.

Predatory beasts and eagles, not the hunter's rifle, are responsible for the gradual wiping out of vast herds that once were found in the Centennial state, the report indicated.

According to the report there are only 183 wolves in the 15 national forests of the state; 437 mountain lions are accounted for, while it is believed that only 34 grizzly bears remain in the region.

Beaver and brown bear are holding their own in number, but mountain sheep, deer and antelope are rapidly dwindling.

Blamed Bobbed Hair.

Leominster, Mass.—Bobbed hair and its popularity was blamed for the unemployment in this city by President Driscoll of the chamber of commerce in a speech the other day, when he asserted the unemployment situation is worse now than on January 1. He said the mania for bobbed locks has greatly decreased the demand for combs, hairpins and barrettes, which constitutes Leominster's leading industry.

Radio Plows May Replace Hired Men on Farms Soon

Mechanical plows controlled from a radio tower may be expected to revolutionize agriculture of the future, according to John Hays Hammond, Jr., of Washington. "Gangs of mechanical plows of the kind already in use on the great farms in the Middle West can be controlled and operated simultaneously by radio from a tower, centrally located," he said. "Work which now takes weeks can be done in days. What that will mean to agriculture is self-evident."

Veni, Vidi, Vici

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

It was odd. Plenty of people did not really look at Evelyn, but somehow those who did looked again and again. There was nothing arresting to the casual eye, not a salient of shape or coloring or motion. Demond told his sister that her friend was "remarkably unremarkable" the first day of her visit to Waysend. Nor did he revise the verdict until Cecile Ware appeared on the scene.

Cecile was arresting—dimpled, rosy, almost loud in her coloring, with merry dark eyes, and tendrilly hair from whose soft dusks sun rays struck vivid Titian flashes. Audacious in everything from clothes to creeds, full of life even to overflowing, with a bird in her throat that piped sweetly, if a bit shrilly at times, and a pair of dancing feet, she was commonly justified in writing upon her spirit's banner: "Veni, vidi, vici," and getting away with it.

Thus she was Evelyn's complementary color. After the manner of complementaries she brought out her opposite surprisingly. It took Demond three days to realise the fact. The freshet helped a bit. For three days it inclosed Waysend with a flooding silver wall even the hardiest might not pass. At first Cecile "adored it," sleeping until noon, then springing up to dart out in her bathrobe, and dance on the turf inches deep in water. Over her shoulder she dared Demond to join her. "Don't be a fraid-cat like Rab and Eve," she half chanted. "The water is fine once you are in."

He only laughed, shaking his head. She too, laughed, but there was a sediment of pique below her mirth. It got more ponderable when no word was spoken regarding her exploit in calling up the young new minister and saying: "If you want any first-class evidence about the flood, come over and let me tell you. I hear you are giving a series of miracles—this will help to make your next sermon a corker."

Cecile's heart, unlike the moon, did not always have a man in it. But a man within her sphere of influence, several men indeed, added to her joy in living.

Demond had played up to her so gallantly she had set him down as too easy. Add that Evelyn, coming first, had not captivated a creature so susceptible—if only she had done it, what joy in taking him away! Cecile was, you see, predacious by instinct, no less practice—even the helpless innocence of the young new minister had not disarmed her. Yet, she felt a curious envy of Evelyn, who went her serene way, troubling naught. How did she manage not to resent the difference Demond showed? That was a puzzle—one that made Cecile frown at her image in the mirror.

If only she had known. Evelyn was not on conquest bent. Shyly, in the mistiest depths of consciousness, she visioned love and a lover. Both would come in their own good time. Until then it was hers to be happy in life, sunshine, flowers and singing birds, human comradery, and the joys of friendly service. Intuitively she saw through Cecile—her arts, graces and grimaces—with tolerant amusement that made either criticism or thought of rivalry out of the question. Allen Demond, as head of the house, owed her hospitable courtesy—nothing more. Receiving it in unstinted measure, she would have blushed redder than any rose at thought of demanding anything beyond.

She had no mind to cast herself for the part of Little Sunshine while the rains descended and the floods came.

Instead she sat quiet, reading a little, knitting a great deal. Her fingers, slim, tapering and deft, wrought rainbow miracles of gay wool, but it was Cecile who snatched them away to exhibit them and demand praise for them, as excuse, it seemed, for swathing herself in their filmy softness. The rainbows, she knew, set off her gypsy beauty, especially in a world all gray and sodden. But she tired of the pastime as she did of most things, so upon the third weepy afternoon she burst out tempestuously:

"Put away that basket—those needles—everything. Unless you do I shall scream; I may even bit you. You—you insult me playing statue all through this beastly weather. Patient Griselda, is that your game? Do you think seeing the difference, Allen Demond will hate me?"

"Why, no. The contrast—if there is one—should be all in your favor," Evelyn said softly, a quick color flashing into her face. Cecile flung away the knitting bag, clutched both Evelyn's wrists, dragged her upright and said shrilly:

"You—you know better! Know I'm a riot—and you a dove of peace. On the surface, that is, on the surface. I also know better. Deep down you're a woman the same as I am. That means you have a devil, only you keep it in leash. It shall break loose—I will make it. Unless I do I shall go mad."

She was panting heavily, her eyes glassy with stress of anger. Her temper had got beyond control—she made to shake Evelyn violently—but suddenly stood stock still—still a pattern of amazement. The two were of a height, but Evelyn was slighter and slenderer. Yet, no longer passive, she stood like a pillar, upright, unshaken, firm on her small feet, the while Cecile strove to bend or overthrow her. Like lightning one hand freed itself—to be grasped about Cecile's wrist and hold it powerless.

Then gently, but irresistibly, she pressed her advantage—bore Cecile backward toward a soft couch, and ended by forcing her down upon it.

"Lie there. Still. Don't speak until I tell you," she said clearly, yet hardly above a whisper. Cecile hid her eyes but snapped viciously; "Now you have cowed the animal, call in the audience. I want to hear what your fine explanation will be."

"There will be none—now, nor ever," Evelyn answered, bending to help Cecile rise: "You must go to your room for half an hour," she added. "Come, I will help you—you are hardly steady enough to go alone."

"You—say—you—won't—tell!" Cecile said, rising unsteadily: "Tell me, why not? It must be a good reason—or I shall know you are lying—"

"A spoiled child isn't worth one of my lies—they are—very artistic," Evelyn answered with a little laugh. And that was the last straw—it broke the back of the pride-camel. Weeping and furious, Cecile tottered away—but in the last flash of temper slammed her door in Evelyn's face.

Evelyn did not mind—she ran back to rescue and hide her ruined handiwork—the rent scarf, the broken needles were too eloquent for other seeing. But she found them in other hands—Allen Demond's, indeed. He was clutching them hard, and staring at them so intently he was unconscious of her until she tried gently to draw away what he held.

"I know you could give beautiful reasons for this," he said, holding fast what he had found. "But remember what you said about wasting one of your artistic lies? I was outside on the porch—heard everything—and saw the last half of the play. Tell me—why did you save her from herself?"

"Oh, I thought you liked her so much it would be a pity to spoil the romance," Evelyn said with a trace of sparkle. Allen caught both her hands saying: "Romance begins here and now. Please tell me the end."

IN HEART OF OLD JAPAN

Atmosphere of Past Centuries' Civilization Clings to Nara, Ancient City.

Nara is the center of Japan's old civilization, observes a writer in the London Times. White-walled houses among pine trees, white winding roads through rice fields, by pond and river; pear trellises flowering white; peach orchards in blossom, and everywhere cherry trees like pink clouds.

Over a thousand years have passed since Nara was the capital, yet much of the atmosphere created by the seven monarchs who lived there still clings about the place. Its shrines and temples, so wonderfully preserved and restored, attract Japanese pilgrims and visitors from all quarters of the globe; so that its main street, with the tempting displays of lacquer and wood carving, seems always to be celebrating a festival. In cherry season the whole countryside flocks to Nara to picnic under the cryptomerias in Nara park, the extensive lands which once surrounded the monastery of Kofukuji.

If Nara has one spot which visitors can never forget, that spot is the shrine of Kasuga, sacred for centuries to certain of the ancestral gods. The vast vermilion Torii against the dark misty trees, which marks the approach, makes the stranger feel he is indeed on holy ground. But Kasuga in general, owing to its brilliant buildings billows of cherry blossom in spring and fiery show of maples in autumn, is more theatrical than religious. It might have been set apart for out-of-door performances, and, in fact, Japan's early art in music, dancing and acting was closely associated with this shrine.

The whole region in which Nara stands is a museum of the arts and crafts of a thousand years ago. There is the cradle of the race. No part of Japan is so full of meaning to those who realize that the present has grown out of the past, its fruit the gatherings of distant centuries.
